This photograph isn't big enough to show you the real advantage this store has gained by using Baines' Brackets. You can see the neat, compact effect, but you can't see the saving in shelf room, which is the main point.

This store, whose picture appears above, actually and literally has one-fourth more goods on its shelves than it had before. Why? Because Baines' Brackets support the shelves without uprights. The shelves are clear for goods from end to end.

The Brackets are much cheaper than 25 per cent. of your shelf room.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

¶ The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

Fall Business Prospects in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" Addresses a Letter to a Representative Grocer or General Storekeeper in Every County of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, Asking the Condition of Business, Whether the People are Employed and Have Money, Whether Chain Store Competition Affects Them, and Condition of Collections. Some of the Answers Received.

In an effort to learn what the immediate future holds for retail grocers and general storekeepers during the coming fall and winter, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has addressed a letter to a representative retailer in every county in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware. The letter asked the dealers addressed to answer the following questions:—

1. Is there plenty of money in your territory?
2. Are the people employed?
3. Are your collections good?
4. Are you suffering from chain store competition?
5. On the whole, do you expect your business to be as good, or better, or not as good, as last Fall's business?

Answers to these questions are beginning to come in and will be published as fast as received:—

HUNTINGDON COUNTY, PA.

1.—Yes.
2.—Not enough, send more men.
3.—Yes.
4.—No.
5.—Better.

Support Woodrow Wilson for President and all he stands for and prosperity will ever live.

A. A. Bollinger,
Huntingdon, Pa.

FRANKLIN COUNTY, PA.

1.—Yes.
2.—Yes.
3.—Yes.
4.—No.
5.—Better.

Remarks: I have a new competitor in my neighborhood. Glad to state I have felt no effects of him yet, as business is on the increase.

P. S.—This is my present opinion, unless coming strike affects prospects.

E. G. Wenger,
Chambersburg, Pa.

COLUMBIA COUNTY, PA.

1.—Yes.
2.—Yes.
3.—No.
4.—No.

Business is good, but collections are slow. Our people are all working and making pretty good money, but are slow in paying bills.

H. G. Pennington,
Bloomsburg, Pa.

CLARION COUNTY, PA.

1.—No.
2.—Yes.
3.—Fair.
4.—Yes.
5.—Hardly as good.

We are just beginning to feel chain store competition. The "Prosperity," yellow front chain store, opened up here a couple of months ago. They sell some staples at wholesale price.

The cost of necessities has advanced much more than have wages, thus making it very difficult to handle the wage earning credit customers.

J. T. Shumaker,
Clarion, Pa.

POTTER COUNTY, PA.

Things are about the same here in this locality as last fall. As far as I know my business is running along about the same, a little better if anything.

J. M. Clark,
Coudersport, Pa.

NEWCASTLE COUNTY, DEL.

1.—Yes.
2.—Everyone who wants work can get it.
3.—Cash business.
4.—No.
5.—Better.

Business is generally good in Wilmington. The only thing we have to contend with is the high prices we are paying and the trouble to get a sufficient margin to cover expenses and get some profit. People are so hard to suit and want the very best, which is natural, paying the prices now current; also delivery service expected to be very prompt.

William Stewart,
Wilmington, Del.

CAMERON COUNTY, PA.

1.—Yes.
2.—Yes.
3.—Yes.
4.—Not yet, we expect some.
5.—Perhaps no better.

We suffer from mail order business.

Emporium, Pa.

DAUPHIN COUNTY, PA.

My opinion is that we are going to have good business in this territory this fall. Some people, it seems, are born to take the joy out of life, that is why there is a difference of opinion.

Your first question, "Is there plenty of money in your territory?" Lots of it, people never had more in the history of our country, but I have the time of my life trying to get them to bring more of it to me.

Second, "Are the people employed?" You look at the "Help Wanted" columns of most any newspaper and you will find corporations and employers of most all descriptions asking for help, and offering unusual inducements and pay. That was not the condition a year or two ago. Why, the man that really don't have to work at all is working now because work is so popular and does it to be in style.

Third, "Are your collections good?" If some people can't pay their bills now they never will, and if they got two or three times as much money as they are getting now they still would forget their obligations; with that class collections are always poor, but on the whole would say collections are good.

Fourth, "Are you suffering from chain store competition?" Suffering, that is some word in this connection. I believe I did hear some one say that there are chain stores in town, and if any one is suffering it must be their patrons, certainly not I. My business is better this year than last. We don't have time to knock the chain stores, for every knock is a boost, but we are trying to boost our store, which, after all, is the most effective way of knocking the chain store.

I expect my business to be better this fall than last, but it is up to me to make it so.

Since conditions have improved we find many new stores, mostly small, but all get a share of the business and eat up the natural increase. We believe the ease of obtaining credit from the jobber is largely responsible for so many small stores. Their expense is so light they can undersell the legitimate merchant.

More Packers Condemn Local Jobber's Sale of Yellow Tail Fish as the Same as Tuna

Largest Concerns in the Country Write This Paper The Janney Co's Statement Regarding Above are Unwarranted and Untrue. Jobbing Firm in Question Make Foolish Defence.

Two weeks ago we brought the attention of the trade to the fact that the wholesale grocery house of B. S. Janney, Jr., & Co., Philadelphia, had been advertising yellow tail fish as "the same as tuna," stating that if you put a can of each side by side you could not tell the difference. This statement was not true—yellow tail is much inferior to and instantly discernible from tuna, and we devoted some space to it because if some retailer believed the Janney statement and sold or advertised yellow tail to his own trade, he might get into trouble not only with the customer who was thus deceived, but with the law.

In the last issue of the Janney house organ, the Janney concern takes notice of the incident as follows:—

Of course this means nothing. Even if the Janney concern got the letter it says it got, and even if it says all that the Janney concern says it says, there is nothing in that to warrant the Janney concern's statement that yellow tail is "same as tuna fish," or that the meat of yellow tail fish "is as white, as tender and delicate in flavor, and as smooth in texture as any white meat tuna fish you ever saw, and if you opened a tin alongside of tuna, you could not tell the difference between them."

More than this, Janney & Co. undoubtedly bought the yellow tail fish on sample, and they knew perfectly well, no matter what the packer said, that the statements made were absolutely untrue.

Following are some additional letters from tuna packers regarding the matter:—

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Yellowtail is an entirely different fish from the tuna. The flesh is not so white, being of a brownish tint, and is not so tender. The food qualities are probably as good, but the flavor is different, the flesh not so tender and the color, being darker, is not so sightly.

The U. S. Pure Food Department has issued an order that "yellowtail" cannot be packed under the name of Yellow Tail Fish The original packer of Tuna Fish and the packer of the Premium Brand, which is the most in demand, says in his letter to us that Yellow Tail Fish is not only the equal of Tuna Fish, but is sweeter and better than Tuna Fish. We are very careful in the columns to have the credentials before we make the statement. If anyone, including the Editor of the "Grocery World," wants to see the letter setting forth the quality of Yellow Tail Fish as compared to Tuna Fish, we shall be glad to show it to them; it is written by the Premier Packing Co.

We pack yellowtail, but sell it for a very much lower price.

East San Pedro, Cal., Aug. 29, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Regarding yellowtail fish, beg to state that we would advise you to buy a can of yellowtail and open it beside a can of tuna fish, and you can readily see that there is no similarity whatever.

There was packed last year quite a good deal of yellowtail and the same was very hard to sell. That is the reason for the prices that are being offered, and we do not think that in justice to the ultimate consumer, or to the retailers themselves, that anybody should represent this article as the same quality as tuna.

Yours truly,
Southern California Fish Co.
W. V. Ambrose, President.

East San Pedro, Cal., Aug. 30, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—In reference to the representation being made by the wholesale grocery house of B. S. Janney, Jr., & Co., of your city, as to yellowtail fish being the same as tuna fish, and other representations as to the quality, we do not agree with this firm as to this and think they are trying to mislead the public, and to the detriment of a fish product which has no equal.

We would be very much pleased to have you publish an article in some issue of your paper calling attention to the misrepresentation as being made by merchants as to their statements that yellow tail fish is the same as tuna fish.

Will state that this fish is an entirely different fish and is not of the same family as the tuna any more than the mackerel belongs to the halibut family or salmon family. The meat is not as tender or as white, nor does it have the delicious flavor of tuna fish. In fact, there is no comparison between the two products.

Trusting that you will give this as wide publicity as possible in the interest of the tuna packers, and thanking you, we remain,

Yours truly,
White Star Canning Co.

Standards for Fruit Baskets Are Now a Fact.

Standards for Climax baskets for grapes, other fruits and vegetables, and other types of baskets and containers used for small fruits, berries and vegetables in interstate commerce are fixed by an act approved by the President August 31st. The law will become effective November 1, 1917. The effect of the act will be to require the use of the standards in manufacturing, sale or shipment for all interstate commerce, whether the containers are filled or unfilled. A large part of the traffic in fruits and vegetables in this country enter interstate commerce. The law relates only to the containers and will not affect local regulations in regard to heaped measure or other method of filling. A special exemption from the operations of the law is made for all containers manufactured, sold or shipped, when intended for export to foreign countries, and when such containers accord with the specifications of the foreign purchases, or comply with the laws of the country to which the shipment is destined. Standards of three capacities are fixed for Climax baskets—two, four and twelve quarts, dry measure. These containers, often known as "grape baskets," have relatively narrow, flat bottoms, rounded at each end, and thin sides flaring slightly from the perpendicular. The handle is hooped over at the middle from side to side. In addition to fixing the capacities of these standard baskets of this type, the law also prescribes their dimensions. The other standards are for "baskets or other containers for small fruits, berries and vegetables." They are to have capacities only of one-half pint, one pint, one quart or multiples of one quart, dry measure. Such containers may be of any shape so long as their capacities accurately accord with the standard requirements.

The Trade at the Mercy of Ignorance.

The lack of practical knowledge about business needs and customs, which marks the administrative and legislative bodies of this country, was never more clearly shown than by the recent order by the Interstate Commerce Commission, increasing freight rates on California products to take effect September 1st. The enforcement of this order, as published last week, has been postponed until December 30th, on complaint of shippers from all over the country.

The way in which this advance would have affected the grocery trade, had it occurred September 1st, is explained in the following statement made to the Interstate Commerce Commission by Walter B. Timms, of New York:—

> This custom is and has been for the past thirty years or more for the wholesalers to purchase these commodities which comprise principally canned fruits, canned salmon, dried fruits of all varieties and dried beans, during the early part of the year for delivery during the fall or when the crops of these various products are harvested and ready for the market, and in turn to resell them to the retail trade trade throughout the country for delivery during the fall, and also in more recent years purchase large quantities of canned pineapple from the packers on the Sandwich Islands for shipment to the wholesaler and delivery to the retailer in the same manner.
> As the cost of freight on these products is an important factor, stability in freight rates during the buying and delivery season is of the utmost importance. I can never recall a change in freight rates of any importance during the season of production and shipment.
> The rates of freight from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic seaboard terminals, now in force, are as stated in the schedule.
> In June, 1916, your Commission issued an order to the transcontinental railroads to the effect that the rates between the Pacific and Atlantic coast and between the Atlantic and Pacific coast based upon water competition through the Panama Canal, where they conflicted with the long and short haul clause of the Interstate Commerce Act, must be changed to comply with that clause.
> About August 1st the transcontinental lines issued a tariff in which on many commodities of food the rates were more than doubled as compared with those in force via Sunset and Santa Fe Gulf routes, and an advance of about 33⅓ per cent. over the rates in force via transcontinental all rail routes.
> In addition to this, about August 1st the two railroads operating via rail and Gulf notified the trade of an embargo on all shipments via that route.
> The entire food distribution trade east of the Rocky Mountains are confronted with an unprecedented situation; in fact, have bought a large quantity, estimated to be at least 100,000 cars of the food products mentioned with the expectation that, as in former years, freight rates would remain unchanged during the season and resold in great part this large amount of merchandise to the retail trade, they find that shipments made at the rates proposed after September 1st must be delivered to retailers in many cases at cost and in some cases at a loss because of the additional cost of freight.

As stated, after learning the facts, the Commission postponed the advance until December 1st, when little or no freight will be coming East from California. That was fair enough, but since they considered the trade's opposition sound, it follows that if they had had the facts before they made the order, they would never have made it, as of September 1st. Doesn't it seem remarkable that a body like the Interstate Commerce Commission would go off half cock this way, upsetting trade conditions all over the country? No, it really does not seem so remarkable, to one who has seen the same thing happen with Governmental bodies so many times before.

Crooked Bankrupt Merchants

Mr. T. Homer Green, of the jobbing house of Green & De Laittre, Minneapolis, Minn., uses the following argument against the repeal of the National Bankruptcy Act:—

> The statement that an honest failure is the exception is not borne out by the facts. Experience teaches that some men are honest under all circumstances, the great majority are honest under ordinary circumstances and comparatively few men are really dishonest. Incompetence and failure should not be designated as dishonesty.
> When a man has given up all his unexempt property for the benefit of his creditors it is but common honesty and an act of humanity to him and his family and justice to the State to release him from further involuntary payment of his debts.

My experience is that the honest merchant, as a rule, does not need the Bankruptcy Act. I have never yet seen an honest merchant who was in trouble, and who went to his creditors and frankly told them about himself, harrassed by anybody. Any man with a grain of human kindness is anxious to help a fellow-human who has succumbed to difficulties which he could not surmount.

It is the slink who is trying to put something over, who needs the Bankruptcy Act. To smoke these vermin out, I would repeal the law and take a chance that some honest man would be oppressed. I believe that considerably more than half of all bankruptcies are crooked. It is very easy. Any lawyer who can bring himself to do so can take a merchant worth $25,000 net and put him through bankruptcy successfully with a payment of 50 cents on the dollar. Of course such a thing could probably be discovered if any creditor wanted to look into it, but creditors are not given to looking into it. It is too expensive. They thankfully take their little 50 per cent. and go.

Crooked bankrupts and their stil more crooked lawyers know all about this, and scores of them are taking advantage of it every day.

A Suggestion.

Possibly a great many merchants will disagree with this, but I believe the average retailer would be saved a lot of trouble if he would stick less to standard prices and fluctuate more with the market.

The 10-cent seller, at a time like the present, for instance, can become a stone about a dealer's neck. Say that he buys corn at 75 cents a dozen and sells it at a dime. If it drops to 65 cents he still sells it at a dime. And if it goes to 95 he still sells it for a dime, and continues to do so as long as he can, even if the market goes higher.

The vice of this is that it teaches the consumer that corn is a fixed staple, a commodity which does not need to change. As a result, profits are curtailed when the market goes beyond a certain point, and if the worst comes to the worst, and the 10-cent price finally has to be advanced, there is a peck of explaining to do.

In the long run I believe the retailer loses more than he gains by this practice. Of course he gains when the market drops, but he loses when it advances, and particularly just now, when the market is advancing a great deal more than it is declining. My way would be to fix a fair profit on a given selling price. If the market dropped Thief!

I am a retailer who believes that all is fair in love, war and business.

I believe it is legitimate to get the better of anybody I can, because he will doubtless get the better of me if he can.

If I can cause a jobber to abate some of his enormous profits, I have done a good stroke of business, no matter how I do it.

I made a claim on a jobber for a 3-pound shortage on a certain shipment. The jobber allowed the claim without investigation. Later I found out there was no shortage. It was easy money and I did not give it back.

I made another claim of shortage in a month. This time the jobber grumbled, but allowed it. As a matter of fact, he could not help himself, for he is fifty miles away, and cannot conveniently investigate. And he wants my business. There was no foundation for the second claim.

I have at last found a way to compete with the chain stores and to buy my goods right.

I am a thief.

nough to make any change neces- ary, I should drop the retail price ccordingly. If it advanced, I hould advance with it. In other ords, I should protect my profit lways. Certainly this practice ould cause more trouble than pre- erving the uniform selling price, ut it would pay to take it. First ecause it would as I say, preserve ıy profit unimpaired, and second because it would be a magnificent advertisement. Dealers who have the courage to reduce a price which is being paid without objection by their customers are few and far between. A man who would do this systematically, exploiting it constantly in the right kind of advertising, would very quickly create for himself a reputation worth its weight in gold.

lobber Tells Retailers How to Go About Discounting Bills

tarted a Man Right, Who Was Opening a New Store, But Didn't Intend Discounting Bills. Showed Him How He Could Establish a Line of Credit With His Local Bank.

I remember sometime ago while isiting our Escanaba (Mich.) ouse a young man was introduced) me who our manager told me as going into business in an ad- acent town. The man had saved 600 and expected to open a small rocery store. He was buying an opening stock" from our Escanaba ouse and in the course of conver- ation I asked him if he was going to discount his bills and he said he wouldn't be able to but he would pay promptly at maturity. I told this young man that he should build a character for himself and establish a credit standing in his community by discounting his bills. He didn't know how this could be accomplished unless he had the money and he thought he'd have to sell some goods first to get the money to permit him to pay his bills so he could buy more goods. I told this young man that immediately when he went into his town he should call upon the local banker get acquainted with him, give the banker references as to who he was and where he came from, and then deposit what money he had in that bank. He should then say to the banker that it was his desire to buy merchandise and discount his bills and to do so it would be necessary for him to borrow some money from the bank from time to time. He wouldn't want much but his requirements might grow as he developed in business. I told that young man to go to the banker within the next week on such a matter and borrow $50 for 60 days at 6 per cent. It would only cost him 50 cents for the use of the money. The banker would loan it to him and then I told the young man to deposit the proceeds of the note to his own credit right at the bank. The young man said: "What will I use the money for?"

I told him he needn't use it at all —just leave it there to establish himself as a person in the community that has a bank account. I told him he was only paying 50 cents for the privilege of having the account there for 60 days and at the end of 60 days he ought to walk into the banker's office and say: "Mr. Banker, I owe you $50, due to-day. Here's my check for the amount."

Mr. Banker would give the man back his note and charge the check to the man's account and he would realize that that young man had kept a balance in the bank as great or greater than the money the banker actually loaned him. In this way the young man established confidence and he was able to borrow $100 and continue. He followed my advice, and though I haven't had any opportunity of knowing how he is doing now, nevertheless I kept watch of it for almost two years and in that time it was found that he had not only paid his bills, but the money that he had earned in discounts paid the interest at the bank on loans, and this young man had through this method been able to greatly develop his business and buy new fixtures and take on responsibilities which he never could have taken on if he had not established a credit for himself in his community.

Opponent of Stevens Bill Says Trade-marked Goods Cost More Than Same Goods Packed Under Private Brands. Trade Jubilant Over Freight Rate Postponement. American Fair Trade League Sued for Libel. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, September 8, 1916.

Mr. J. W. Hahn, secretary of the National Trade Association, has issued a statement in opposition to the Stevens bill, which would allow manufacturers of trade-marked goods to fix the retail and wholesale selling prices of their goods. His statement will no doubt arouse many such manufacturers to lively protest, for he claims that it costs the consumer money to have goods trade-marked; in other words, that a manufacturer invariably charges more for package goods on which he has put a trade-mark than for the same goods sold in bulk. Not only enough more to cover the cost of packing, Mr. Hahn claims, but even an additional bonus on top of that. Here is a part of Mr. Hahn's statement, which is interesting:—

> I wish to point out the following facts, showing the increased cost at wholesale added to merchandise when sold under trade-mark and the price maintained system over the same cost on merchandise sold by the same manufacturer in bulk without his name and packaged by private distributors.
> There is on the market a certain trade-marked cornstarch sold under a fixed price system which sells wholesale at 7 cents a package. Yet the same quantity of this same starch made by the same manufacturer can be and is bought in bulk and packaged in the same size package by private distributors at a wholesale cost of 3¼ cents, a difference of 3¾ cents. A certain brand of breakfast food, when sold with the manufacturer's name and price maintained system, costs at wholesale 7½ cents, while the same quantity of the same product, made by the same manufacturer, but sold in bulk, can be and is packaged without the manufacturer's name at a wholesale cost of 4 4-10 cents, a difference of 3 cents.
> An even more striking example of the increased cost incurred by having the manufacturer's name attached to a commodity is that of another breakfast food which, when sold with the trade-mark and price standard, costs at wholesale in a 1¼-pound package, 7 1-9 cents, but which when sold in bulk by the same manufacturer can be and is packaged by private distributors at the wholesale cost of 6 6-10 cents for a two-pound package—three-quarters of a pound more for a ½ cent less than for the 1¼ package. Still another breakfast food sells at wholesale in a 1¾-pound package at 6 7-12 cents, while the same product can be and is bought in bulk and packed by private distributers in a two-pound package at a wholesale cost of 4 9-10 cents for the two-pound package, or a quarter of a pound more of the same product for nearly 2 cents less, but minus the manufacturer's name, trade-mark and price standard.
> This difference in the cost of distributing an article when sold with the manufacturer's name over the cost incurred when the article is sold without the manufacturer's trade-mark, emphasizes three very important points around which the discussion of price maintenance turns.
> First.—It is apparent that the manufacturer when he sells his product under his name and price standard and adds as high as 100 per cent. to the wholesale cost is either making a greater profit by virtue of his name or else it costs him that much more to sell and distribute his product under a price-maintained method of distribution.
> Second.—In any event, the consumer must pay more for the product when the manufacturer attempts to sell his product under a trade-mark and price standard than he does when he buys the same product without the manufacturer's name.
> Third.—This point has to do with that unknown quantity which those who are asking for the Stevens Bill have seen fit to term "goodwill." This "goodwill" value, they say, belongs to the manufacturer and does not change hands when the retail merchant buys and pays for the product which bears the manufacturer's name. This point might be called the legal or commercial justification which supporters claim for the bill.
> I have never heard those who urge legislative price maintenance deny the wisdom of the courts in giving to a man the right to dispose of his own property at his own price. Their contention, however, with regard to this "goodwill", value, which they declare is built up as the result of attaching their name to a product, is that it does not belong to the retail merchant —that he does not buy the goodwill when he pays for the merchandise.
> And yet the figures I have presented above show plainly that when the retail merchant buys a product with the manufacturer's name and trade-mark, he pays in some cases 100 per cent. more than he does for the same product when he buys it from the same manufacturer, but without the manufacturer's name.

The trade here are immensely delighted because the Interstate Commerce Commission has postponed the enforcement of the ruling advancing freights on California food products. This was to have taken effect on September 1st, but, as stated last week, it is postponed until December. Jobbers here are already arranging to oppose its advance again before the postponed date at which it is to become operative. It would have caught them right in the midst of their future business had it taken effect September 1st and would have destroyed profits on a very large volume of business. The trade here seem to think that the railroads, influenced by the recent strong protest, will revoke some of the advance themselves.

An effort was made here during the week to pull off a strike of retail grocery clerks, but did not seem to amount to much. The object of the strike was to close the stores at 6 o'clock, which the owners say is impossible in view of the peculiar conditions of the trade here. The proposition is to close the stores at 6 o'clock five nights a week, and at 10 o'clock on Saturday nights. The stores at present close about 7 o'clock. Only a comparatively few men actually walked out and it is expected that the strike will fizzle out entirely in a day or two.

During the week Harry B. Haines, secretary of the National Premium Advertising Association, brought suit to recover $50,000 damages from the American Fair Trade League. Besides being secretary of the Premium Advertising Association, Mr. Haines is editor and publisher of the Paterson, N. J., "Evening News." The basis of the suit is that the American Fair Trade League accused Mr. Haines of publishing untruthful statements for the purpose of deceiving the readers of his paper and advancing his own interests. The suit is an outgrowth of the controversy over the Stevens bill, which would give to manufacturers of trade-marked products the right to fix the wholesale and retail selling price. Secretary Whittier, of the league, believes in fighting those who do not agree with him by calling them all manner of names and ascribing the meanest possible motives to them. He did that with Mr. Haines and the suit is Mr. Haines' reply. Mr. Haines said in discussing his suit: "In this action I hope to bring the American Fair Trade League to the realization that they cannot go on attacking the character and business integrity of a man simply because they disagree with him on the economics of their bill."

To Prevent Dumping Foreign Products in Here at Cut Prices.

The following provision, which is part of the new tariff act, is depend on to prevent the dumping into t country, after the war is over, of f eign products at prices so low as to stroy the American products:—

> Section 99. That it shall be unlawful for any person importing o assisting in importing any articles from any foreign country into th United States, commonly and systematically to import, sell or cause to be imported or sold such articles within the United States at a price substantially less than the actua market value or wholesale price o such articles, at the time of exportation to the United States, in the principal markets of the country of their production, or of other foreign countries to which they are commonly exported, after adding to such market value or wholesale price, freight, duty and other charges and expenses necessarily incident to the importation and sale thereof in the United States: Provided, That such act or acts be done with the intent of destroying or injuring an industry in the United States, or of preventing the establishment of an industry in the United States, or of restraining or monopolizing any part of trade and commerce in such articles in the United States.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no par-ular change, at least none in this untry. On the other side Ceylons ve advanced about 1 cent, but this ll not affect the American mar-ts, certainly not in the near fu-re, and possibly not at all. The mand has been slightly better ring the week owing to the fact at buyers are now taking in new ı. There is nothing brisk, how-er, about the week's business. ices show no change from a week o.

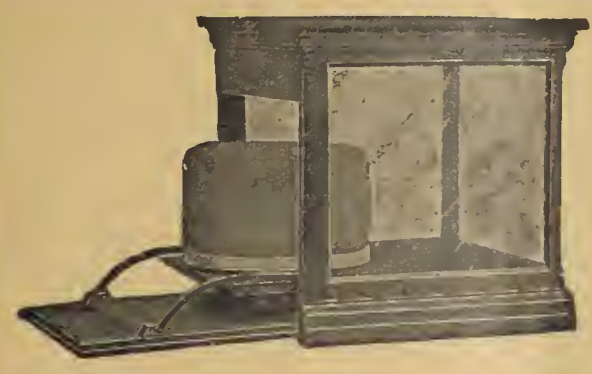
Coffee.

The speculative movement in Rio d Santos coffee has continued ring the week, and in conse-ence prices have advanced about cent. There is still no legiti-ate reason for the advance, al-ough some rumors of damage to e crop have come to this country m Brazil. Demand for Rio and ntos coffee is no more than fair. ilds are unchanged, but if the eculative movement in Brazils ntinues it may be their turn next. va and Mocha unchanged and ll.

Sugar.

The sugar market has gone to ces during the week, as fore-sted in this report last week; all iners have reduced prices to 6¼ r granulated. Raws have been ling soft and low for some time, les having been made as low as 37, and quite a number of sales 5.02. On the basis of to-day's w market, refined is not unduly gh. The cause of the drop is that number of holders of raw sugar no have been holding for a long ne became convinced that they ould not be able to get out at a ofit, and accordingly sacrificed eir holdings. Then too, Califor-ı beet granulated will come on e market in a short time and, llowing that, Colorado beet gran-ated. It is possible that the mar-t may remain where it is for some ne. The consumptive demand is ll below what it ought to be.

Syrup and Molasses.



Glucose is very high on account the advance in the corn market. rn is still advancing, and glucose threatens to advance again, but it cannot stand many more advances as the price is already very high. Compound syrup, which is made chiefly of glucose, is about 4 cents per gallon above normal. The demand, however, is very light. Sugar syrup and molasses are both unchanged and dull. It looks like a good crop of molasses.

Fish.

There has been no particular change in the fish market during the week. The trade are still waiting for new Norway mackerel to be offered, but none have been as yet. Some are being caught, but are evidently being disposed of elsewhere. Shore mackerel show no change from a week ago. Some autumn Irish mackerel are expected here shortly at prices several dollars above normal. The demand for mackerel is good. Cod, hake and haddock show no change for the week. Salmon of all grades are unchanged at the opening prices. Demand active. Domestic sardines are steadily maintained at formerly quoted prices. Demand moderate. All imported sardines unchanged.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are about unchanged. The market is steady to firm on last reported basis. Packers are busy getting up their pack and are not pressing for sale, as they have not yet packed their entire future sales. The season for packing tomatoes so far has been ideal, and if there is no interference from the weather there will be a large pack of fine goods. Corn is looking very firm. They had a good pack in the South, although they will not deliver more than 75 per cent. In New York State the heavy rains reduced the pack to a small fraction of what it should have been, and in the West other unfavorable crop conditions produced the same effect. Maine packers are not expecting to deliver more than 50 to 60 per cent. Prices of corn are firm all along the line. Peas are unchanged from a week ago. The demand is fair. Apples show no change and light demand. California canned goods are quiet at ruling quotations. Among the small Eastern staple canned goods sauer kraut has advanced from 10 to 15 cents per dozen owing to poor cabbage crop.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes have advanced probably ¼ cent and it is not possible now to get anything below a 5-cent basis f. o. b. coast owing to an effort to organize another combination there. The situation is, for the present, somewhat firmer than it has been. Peaches and apricots are unchanged and very dull; so are raisins and currants.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are very firm indeed. The crop in Michigan is supposed to be only 30 per cent. of normal; the average price is $6 per bushel. Marrows are also scarce and range from $5.75 to $6. California limas are unchanged. The outlook for beans of all kinds, with the possible exception of California limas, is very firm. Green and Scotch peas unchanged and quiet.

Butter.

The receipts of butter continue light and the market is very firm on the ruling basis of quotations. There is a good consumptive demand for all grades and the quality arriving is averaging good for the season. Everything desirable meets with a ready sale and the trade look for a continued good demand at about unchanged prices.

Eggs.

The egg market is firm and unchanged, with light receipts and a good consumptive demand. The quality of the eggs arriving is as good perhaps as it could be expected to be during the hot weather. No change is in sight.

Cheese.

The cheese market is very firm, with very light receipts. There is a fair consumptive demand. Prices have advanced ½ cent during the week. The make is light and cheese is still being sold to go to Europe. This makes the supply available for this country very small and is the cause of the present firmness.

Provisions.

All smoked meats are firm at an advance of ¼ cent. Pure lard is firm at ¼ cent advance, and compound is firm at ¾ cent advance. Both are in active demand. The high price of hogs is the reason for these advances. Barreled pork shows an advance of 50 cents per barrel, and dried beef an advance of 1 cent per pound. Canned meats are unchanged.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Spices.

The market is more active, though price changes have been few. Nearly every article in the list is now obtainable here or nearby at a lower figure than is now quoted for far-off shipment. Any unusual demand will have a tendency to raise values.

Peppers.—Foreign markets are higher than our own. The demand here is very much better. The stock of spot Lampong and Malabars is short at present.

White Peppers.—Are generally unchanged, but are in better supply than blacks.

Cloves.—In very much better demand. The market price of cloves here is far less than in Europe or Zanzibar. Sharp advances may be looked for.

Pimento (Allspice).—Rather quiet since the recent advance. The trade, we believe, is fairly well supplied. Jamaica cables quote high prices.

Mace.—In better inquiry and in fairly good supply. Prices here not likely to change.

Nutmegs.—The spot demand is good. Prices are a shade firmer. The assortment here is small. We look for a large demand over the next three or four months.

Cassias.—Saigon grades are offered at attractive price. Batavia demand is dull at present and prices are unchanged. China grades are now reported sharply higher in China. Prices are slowly hardening here.

Gingers.—Rather quiet at present, at generally unchanged prices.

Green Ginger Root.—Now selling in a satisfactory way. The article is rather scarce and firm prices are prevailing.

Tapiocas are dull during the week, at steady to unchanged prices.

Paprikas.—The demand is good. Prices are generally unchanged.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—Caraway is in fair demand since the advance. Celery seed has advanced about 5 cents per pound during the week. Coriander, mustards and cummin in fair demand. Herbs are firm and in better inquiry.

Imported Fish Specialties.

The market report on salt fish is analogous to the weather report—as long as the weather continues hot there will be very little salt fish business, but it is very likely that there will be a strong demand for all kinds of salt fish as soon as the cold weather sets in. Of course, the prices for salt fish are very high and are not likely to come down in the near future, but even at that salt fish is cheaper than other commodities of equal food value.

We have reports from Norway that the belligerent countries are still buying codfish in abnormal quantities. The last report we have from Norway is that about $20 is being paid for 100 pounds of superior quality codfish by the countries now at war.

The imported sardine situation is practically unchanged. The catch in Norway continues fair. It is poor in Portugal and very poor in France. Prices remain just as high as ever, although they have not shown any tendency to advance further during the last few weeks. The demand here, considering the extraordinary high prices at which we are obliged to sell sardines, is very good, indeed. Reports from France show that stocks of sprats are practically exhausted and prices quoted for the new season's catch are simply beyond our limit. We could not sell sprats at the price at which we would have to buy them to-day.

Strohmeyer & Arpe Co.

Foreign Grocery Specialties.

The olive crop reports from Italy continue rather unfavorable, and both Italy and Spain cable further price advances for the best grades of edible olive oil, which is getting exceedingly scarce, and still neither we nor our competitors have as yet advanced our selling prices for olive oil, so the American buyer gets all the benefit of earlier and favorable purchases.

Many inquiries from abroad show that tinplate, wire and other materials are getting scarcer every day and with the advancing prices for all these materials, it stands to reason that all tinned goods are likely to advance in price before long.

Contrary to all expectations, garlic continues in its firm and slightly upward tendency. Stocks here are small.

Spanish pimentos (red peppers) are scarce on spot, and held in very few strong hands. There are offers around for future delivery of pimentos at lower figures. Evidently sellers figure on a big crop and lower prices, but nothing is more uncertain than the pimento crop in Spain, and some one may have to suffer for selling goods practically below the market.

Wheat and Flour.

Nineteen months ago, when Chicago May wheat was selling around $1.65 per bushel, we had a sudden, but only temporary, decline of 20 cents per bushel within the space of a few days, because the English fleet began to bombard the Dardanelles, and it was feared that the Russian surplus would be released. In the first three days of this week we witnessed a decline of 13 cents per bushel, traders fearing that the entrance of Roumania into the war would result in a quick release of the wheat that has been bottled up for over two years.

It has been the feeling in grain circles for sometime that if Turkey sued for a separate peace or Roumania entered the war on the side of the Allies, it would be like a bombshell in the wheat pit, but we venture the prophecy that even should Turkey establish a separate peace that no wheat will be forthcoming from Russia, through the Dardanelles, until a general peace has been established.

Admiral Dewey has recently stated that with two submarines he could keep the entire navies of the world out of Galveston harbor, and no one who knows the sagacity and foresight of the Germans will believe that they have not already provided for this contingency by the establishment of submarines and supply stations at both ends of the Dardanelles to prevent the exportation of the Russian wheat to her enemies, even though Turkey is forced to succumb.

It is of interest at this juncture to calculate upon how much wheat is likely to be brought forward from Russia if a way should be found to open the Dardanelles before a general peace is established. According to Lloyds' Register there are now interned in the Black Sea steamships of only 134,000 tons cargo capacity. This is equivalent to 5,000,000 bushels of wheat, but, as Broomhall points out, the stocks of wheat at the ports are very small and there would be great difficulty in getting it from the interior because of the congestion of the railways with munitions of war, hence we are of the opinion that until there is a general peace and a large number of vessels released from transport service, the shipments of wheat from Russia will not exceed 5,000,000 bushels per month. The problem of the importing nations is to supply themselves with 600,000,000 bushe of wheat by July 31, 1917, and unle a general peace comes before that da they cannot count upon Russia as source of supply. With crop failur in the United States and Canada, th task is a difficult, if not impossible or

They are calculating on a fair cr being raised in India and a full avera crop raised in Argentina. The Ind crop is not in the ground and the A gentina crop is in the grass stage, a will not be harvested until Decemb and shipments never get under f headway until February.

The wheat situation is undenial strong, and in our opinion much high prices are coming. Even if a gene peace comes six months hence, we w have exported by then our entire su plus and will be on a domestic ba and unresponsive to conditions abro

Thinking of Buying a Second-Hand Delivery Car?

Any of you fellows doping it out to buy a delivery car? I suppose you are—everybody's got a hunch sometime or other he'll own a car of some sort. Why the other day a store boy out in Ardmore—he gets $3 a week—told me he'd never own a Ford—"I'm going to have an Overland Six when I buy one," he said.

"When d'ye think you'll get yours—this week?" I said.

"Nope," he said, "but I'll get one all right."

That's what I mean when I say that everybody's got a hunch.

What I started to say was to tell you, when you buy your car, not to tie up with any second-hand outfit. They tell me some second-hand cars are all right. So's some second-hand wives and second-hand everything else. Once in a while you'll pick up a second-hand car that's better than if it was new.

Depends on the car, and who you get it of, and how it's been run, and a lot of other things.

The second-hand tubs you buy of these gyps—these fellows that don't do anything but sell second-hand trucks—are most of 'em funny pictures. I've seen quite a bunch of 'em and darned near all of 'em turned out bad.

I went into a customer's store last month and he wouldn't talk business until he had showed me something he said he had to show me.

"I picked up the biggest good thing you ever saw," he said. "Come back here."

He led me back to his stable.

"What dy'e think of that?" he said.

There stood a little old Ford chewing its cud as peaceful as you please. It had a delivery body on it, and his name was painted on the side. Didn't look bad at all.

"That ain't all," he said, "I've got a touring body too—just take the delivery off and put the other on, and you've got a regular pleasure car. What d'ye think of that?"

"Some outfit," I said. "Where did you get it?"

"I picked it up at a big bargain at a place in Philadelphia where they only sell high grade cars," he said.

"Oh, it ain't new, eh?" I said.

"It's pretty near new," he said. "Only used a litle while and the fellow that owned it before took care of it like you would a baby. What d'ye think I paid for the whole thing?"

That was a good place to make him sore, but I ain't a wise guy for nothing.

"Seven hundred," I said. (Talk about your foxes.)

He was as tickled as a kitten with a quart of cream. I knew he would be.

"That would have been about right," he said, "but I got the whole thing for $350!"

"What you doing—trying to kid me?" I said. Me and Henry Irving are the greatest actors that ever lived, and Henry's dead.

"That's right," he said.

"Well I'll be blamed! Is it all right?"

"Sure it's all right—they guarantee it in writing. Besides that, they told me all about it—how long it had been run and all."

"Let's see the guarantee in writing," I said.

He had it in his pocket. It was a bill and receipt with some small printing on the top. I started in to read the little printing—he said he hadn't.

"Don't make any difference what it says there," he said, "I know what they told me."

Pretty soon I came to this and read it out to him:—

> No salesman has authority to make verbal statements about the car sold herewith, and all such statements are expressly disavowed by the firm. The said car is hereby guaranteed to be in good running order and all guarantees are confined to this.

"Some slick lawyer framed that up I'll bet," I said, "what d'ye think of it?"

"Oh, that's all right," he said, "I suppose they have to do that as a matter of form, to protect themselves."

"Betcher life they do!" I said, "but I ain't seen where it's protecting you as a matter of form."

"I'm not worrying," he said, "the car's all right. Haven't I run it?"

"Did it run all right?" I asked.

"Sure—only had a little trouble with smoking," he said. "Any ca can smoke."

"Did you take it anywhere to se what ailed it?"

"Yes, I had somebody look at i but he didn't know anything—he' a blacksmith, that fellow."

"What did he say?" I went on.

"I don't care what he said—don I know what they told me?"

"What did he say?"

"He said because it was becaus it was an old car," he said, "bu there's nothing to it, don't know——"

"What year did they tell you th car was when you bought it?"

"1913."

"And what year did he say was?"

"He said 1911, but I know be ter. I know it's all right. Loo how easy you change the body- you just undo this bolt—here, I show you. See, you—"

Bing! the rusty old bolt pinch right off! Nineteen hundred a thirteen? Looked more like 190 If I'd have let out the yelp that w in me then I'd never have been ab to sell him another cent's wort I don't know how I kept it in. Ho est, I most bus' me belt.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. Sweeney, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Old Men Clerks.—The popular thought about age to-day is that a man is as old as he thinks he is. If you think in the 50s you'll act in the 50s. If you think in the 60s you'll act in the 60s. Age is what we make it.

If you are 50, drop off 25 and assimilate yourself with the views and activity and good cheer of the boys working beside you of that age. That is the practical way and the only way to keep out of the age rut.

Its the exercise of facilities that count. Old men clerks are too apt to allow these facilities to submerge. Their thinking is wrong. Your mature ideas won't always go, simply because the going is fast. We respect them, but we pass them up. You can hold your job without any trouble if you'll fall in line. Don't knock new fads. You were raised good and healthy on loose oat meal for breakfast and a mug of strong coffee to wash it down, but that's no argument against a cupful of Krumbles and a glass of ice water "in o day."

Visiting Gossipers.—Do you reali that every minute of your store hours paid for by employers? Do you kn that to waste any part of that time not only stealing, but decreasing yo efficiency? One of the common forms of this unconscious stealing a this lessening of your power is to e tertain your friends in the store foolish conversation that does not pe tain to the business. While sharp e ployers invariably note this conditi of affairs, they sometimes feel a ce tain delicacy about calling attention it unless it is continuous and glarin evident.

All employees, in whatever capaci should politely inform such callers, am sorry to have to discontinue this ta as it is against the rules of the firm No sensible person would take offen at such a remark, but on the contra admire you for delivering it and to t firm for putting it in force.

"That ain't anything," he said, ou can fix that in five minutes." Then we went back to the store, d I pretty soon left. I could see wasn't quite as sure as he had en. I heard through another fel- v afterward that that car was the orst old lemon in Pennsylvania— had to hire steady board for it in e machine shop. It had kidney ouble, and its bladder leaked and e engine had mumps—oh, a lot of ings ailed it—it was one of those rs that "enjoy poor health."

I knew something was coming him as soon as I saw that fine inting on the bill. I'm looking rward to going back there and eing him try to sidestep the sub- ct. Will he sidestep the subject? ou bet he won't—not with me. l get right in it—after I get my der.

This Tells the Tale

¶ A product which has been on the market fifty-eight years is a product which has stood the hardest of all tests—the test of time. "Knight's Cooking Extracts" is a phrase familiar to man, woman and child, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf. It is easy to tell why; no housewife ever had a bottle go back on her and no house- wife ever will. Good extracts must be on your shelves. Grocers, if you sell Knight's Extracts we need say nothing more to you; if you don't, we want one order from you—we are sure of more. You are certain of their absolute purity and a good profit.

No. 380.—Don't Place Fire Insurance With Anybody You Don't Know About.

Several months ago, in the course of an article on one phase of insurance, I said that a man who placed fire insurance with anybody but the home office, or an accredited general agent or branch manager, should always see to it that the solicitor had authority to accept the business, and that he actually forwarded this particular business and had it accepted by the company. Otherwise the company might avoid paying the loss if there was a fire. The situation which I contemplated was the precise situation reported in the following letter:—

Springfield, Ohio.

A few weeks ago I placed some fire insurance on store building and warehouse with a young chap who had been acting as solicitor for a Pennsylvania company. I was anxious to help him along, so I gave him the insurance instead of to a local agent, who represented other companies, and who had handled most of my insurance for several years. A few days after I gave the order and paid the premium to this young fellow, he came in and said the inusrance was in force and he would send me the policy as soon as it arrived. I never got the policy; in fact, I was absent from business after that and it slipped my mind. We had a fire last month, loss $1,300, and the company says the order was never received by them and they therefore are not liable. Was not the solicitor an agent of the company, and when I gave him the order—at his own solicitation—and paid him the premium, was it not the same as if I had done it to the company iself? Would you not advise me that the company was bound in this case?

R. M. & Co.

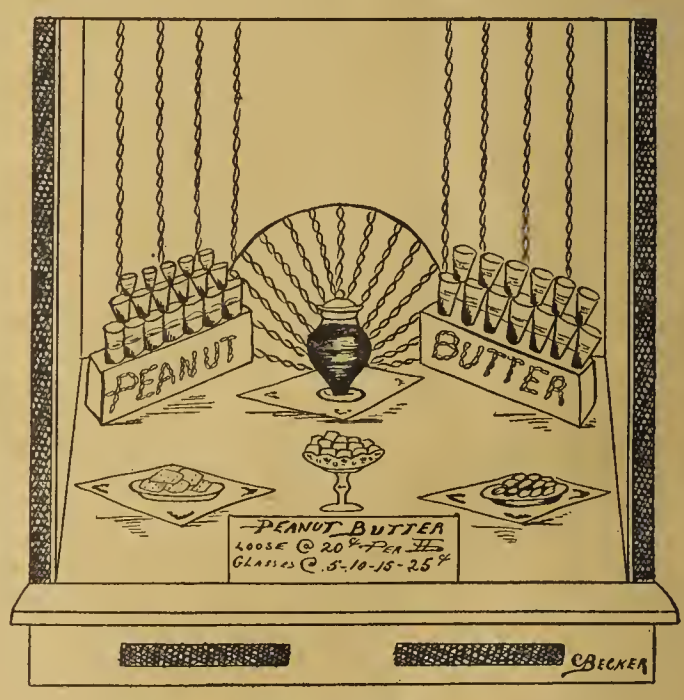
I am much inclined to believe that the company is not bound and that this correspondent must stand the loss himself. Of course he can either arrest the solicitor, or he can sue him for damages for misrepresentation, but both of these remedies are quite unsatisfactory compared with collecting the fire loss.

When insurance is placed direct with the home office of an insurance company, of course the company is bound from the minute it accepts the order. And when insurance is placed with a general agent located in some outside town or city, the company is bound in the same way, because the general agent of an insurance company always has authority to solicit and accept business, and to bind the company when he accepts it.

But when you place business with a solicitor—even a solicitor of the home office or of the general agency in your town—you are taking a risk, because a solicitor's authority is usually limited to soliciting applications and submitting them to his superiors, who can reject them if they like. When an application is submitted to a superior and accepted, then the company is bound and not before. Until then, the matter is open. If the solicitor puts the premium in his pocket and the application in his desk, of course the company is not bound, because it never got into the matter at all. That seems to have been the case here.

As a recent Western case, where the facts were somewhat similar (National Union Fire Insurance Co. vs. School District, 182 S. W. 547, Arkansas Supreme Court) puts it:—

There was no contract of insurance here, because the agent had only the power to receive and forward applications, and the company could always refuse or accept an application at its discretion. One who gives business to a soliciting agent is bound to know the extent of the agent's power, he cannot assume that the agent has unlimited power.



I have repeatedly said that more carelessness is exhibited by business men toward their insurance matters than toward anything else. This case is exactly in point, in these respects:—

1—This correspondent evidently made it easy for the solicitor to steal the premium by making the check out to his order or paying him in cash. I assume this, but of course I may be wrong. Checks for insurance premiums should always be made out to the company or to the accredited general agent, never to a solicitor.

2—This correspondent went away and forgot to get his policy. Had he kept after it and demanded it, the fraud would have been discovered and he could have protected himself before the fire.

The same pressing need to know that an insurance agent with whom you are dealing has authority to bind the company extends to other matters than accepting business. It extends to such matters as changing the terms of a policy or granting concessions and extensions, which things are done thousands of times every day. An agent may not have power to do these things, though he may have power to do everything else. When such things are asked of an agent it is the duty of the person asking to know that the agent has authority to do it. He should not rest until he has the company's O. K. It is all right for the agent, when you ask him, to say "Oh, certainly, I have authority to do that. I do it a dozen times every day." That will not help you if something arises and the company refuses to be bound on the ground that the agent lacked the authority to bind it in this respect. Hundreds of policies have been made invalid in exactly this way.

Weekly Window Display Suggestions

Peanut Butter Display.

This is a good time to display peanut butter, and also some confections made with it. Cover the bottom of the window with light green crepe paper. Directly in front place a sign card giving prices for loose peanut butter and that in glasses. In back of this display some peanut butter fudge on a tall glass dish, and at each side place a paper napkin. On one place a plate of cracker peanut butter sandwiches, and on the other a dish of home-made cream chocolates, with peanut butter filling. In the center, to the rear, on a paper napkin, display some of the loose butter in a large jar. Cover two long boxes with the green crepe paper—have them wide enough to hold all sizes of glasses, as shown. The letters to form the words "Peanut Butter," made with large perfect peanuts, can be held in place by putting some glue on each nut, but be sure to use it thick enough to hold them securely. Form the arch between the boxes by bending a hoop and covering it with the green crepe paper. Then cut some of the paper in two-inch strips, twist them and arrange as shown in the illustration.

If you deal with anybody but the ome office in such matters, you are ot safe until you have the com- any's written O. K.

ITEMS OF GENERAL INTEREST.

taple Food Yields a Disappointment.

The National City Bank, which keeps ose watch on everything that affects siness, says the staple food crops are disappointment. Here is an extract om a statement sent this paper:—

The crops are a disappointment. We have been favored with two extraordinary crop yields since the war began, and in the natural order of things could hardly hope for more. We are far from a crop failure, but the yield is sufficiently short to make prices higher for consumers, and they were already high enough to intensify the demands for more wages. The corn crop has been cut down by drought to about 2,500,000,000 bushels, and this inevitably means dear meats. Hogs have been selling on the Chicago market above $11 per hundred weight, and the great consumptive demand for meats is scarcely satisfied. Canadian buyers have been taking hogs freely from Chicago at the highest prices. The wheat crop is badly hurt, the total yield probably not exceeding the requirements of this country for food and seed. Fortunately, there are important stocks in this country carried over from the two big crops of 1914 and 1915. British grown wheat has been selling in the interior markets of England above $2 per bushel, and it has seemed quite possible that that price might be reached in the United States. The market went off heavily on the news of Roumania's entrance into the war, on the theory that the Dardanelles might be open before the end of the crop year, and Russian and Roumanian wheat brought out.

Answer These Ten Questions.

A speaker at a recent trade convenon asked the delegates the following en questions, covering the interesting nd important question of knowledge of ne's business:—

1. Are you making money?
2. How much?
3. How do you know? Do you know at all times that you are making money?
4. What does it cost per mile to operate your automobile delivery? Did you ever stop to figure that out?
5. What is the average mile that an automobile delivery makes on a gallon of gasoline? Did you ever stop to figure that out?
6. What does it cost to deliver each package, including the approvals and calls that you go for?
7. What does it cost to send out monthly statements?
8. What does it cost for collectors to call upon delinquents, including car fare when necessary?
9. What does it cost in salesmen's salaries to sell goods?
10. What does it cost to lay down your freight and express, and what do you make on every dollar you sell?

Now, it costs to operate an automobile, according to my figures, figures, 11.8 cents per mile, the average is thirteen miles to a gallon of gasoline. In the delivery of packages it costs 6.5 cents, and that includes, as before stated, the approvals and the calls for deliveries. The month statements cost 4.7 cents to send them out. It costs 10 cents to call on delinquents who have not paid their bills; that includes car fare when necessary. It costs for salesmen to sell the goods, 3.2 cents to 8.7 cents, according to the departments and according to their efficiency. It costs 2.3 cents to lay down freight and express.

Food Products Up Twelve and a Half Per Cent. Since the War and Sixty-one Per Cent. Since 1904.

Babson, the statistician, says food products as a class have advanced 12½ per cent. since the war opened and 61 per cent. since 1904.

Apples were $1.25 a barrel wholesale in 1904, a decade before the war, and are now $2.

Beef was $4.75 per hundredweight wholesale in 1904 and is now $7.

Beans were $2.80 a bushel wholesale in 1904 and are now $6.25.

Bacon was 7 cents a pound wholesale in 1904 and is now .147 cents.

Butter was 18½ cents a pound wholesale in 1904 and is now 34 cents.

Cheese was 8 cents a pound wholesale in 1904 and is now 18.

Coffee was 7 cents a pound wholesale in 1904 and is now 9½.

Cocoa was 11 cents a pound wholesale in 1904 and is now 18.

Codfish was $6 a quintal wholesale in 1904 and is now $8.

Eggs were 18 cents a dozen wholesale in 1904 and are to-day 40.

Flour was 5½ cents a pound on an average, wholesale, in 1904, and is now 8½.

Lard was 8 cents a pound wholesale in 1904 and is now 14.

Mackerel was $17 a barrel wholesale in 1904 and is now $20.

Milk was generally 5 cents a quart in the city, and an equivalent grade is now 10.

Mutton was 7¼ cents a pound and is now 16, and a month ago was 17.

Salt pork was $13 a barrel and is now $28.

Potatoes were $1.25 a bushel, where they are now $3.

Rice was 4 cents a pound, where it is now 5½ cents.

The following articles have risen 12½ per cent. since the beginning of the war in 1914: Wheat, corn, oats, barley, rye, flour, beeves, sheep, hogs, horses, mutton, milk, eggs, bread, bacon, beans, butter, lard, cheese, mackerel, codfish, coffee, sugar, tea, molasses, salt, rice, beans, peas, potatoes, apples, cranberries, peanuts, lemons, raisins and currants.

Crackers and Coffee Must Be Fresh and Clean in order to be a success. The cracker baker and the coffee roaster must take care of the flavor and goodness, but keeping the product clean and fresh is a duty that can be left satisfactorily to

Why Food Manufacturers Let Cut-Price Drug Stores Slaughter Their Goods in One-Cent Sales

New York Retail Grocers' Association Protests to Manufacturers Who Did This With the Riker-Hegeman Co. Many Manufacturers Defend Themselves. Typical Letter from Van Camp Co.

The New York Retail Grocers' Association is raising quite a time with manufacturers of food products who alllowed the Riker-Hegeman Co. to include their products in their one-cent sales. In the one-cent sale, two articles are sold at one cent more than the price of one. That is, if the price of one is 25 cents, two are sold at 26 cents. The chain store drug concern holds these sales wherever they have stores, and of course for the time being they demoralize the market for all the products so sold.

The New York organization made a list of all the food manufacturers represented in the sale, and wrote them all a letter of protest. Many answers were received, a typical one being the following from the Van Camp Products Co.:—

> To give you the facts in the case, we first wish to state that the article (Van Camp's Soups) and one other article (Van Camp's Catsup) which were sold to The Riker-Hegerman Co., are two articles which are not generally stocked and sold by the retail grocery trade on this market.
> We are able, not by guesswork, but by actual figures based upon information obtained by our own salesmen, to state to you that Van Camp's Soup is not carried by more than 5 per cent. and Van Camp's Catsup not more than 2 per cent. of the grocery trade in the greater New York and surrounding markets.
> Please bear this in mind, that only 5 stores out of 100, so far as soup is concerned, and not more than 2 stores out of each 100 stock Van Camp's Catsup.
> This is not due to any lack of profit which we offer the retail grocery trade on these articles, because they are now handling other brands at a very much smaller margin of profit.
> It is not due to the fact that Van Camp's quality is not equal to any manufactured in the country, but is very largely due to the fact that the retail grocery trade will not, as a rule, extend the amount of co-operation to the manufacturer which they are always ready to demand from him.
> We are always ready and willing to return a yard of co-operation for one inch which is extended to us, but in the absence of any co-operation, we are certainly at liberty to advertise and distribute any of our products in any way which we deem best for our own benefit.
> We consider the Riker-Hegeman sales an advertising scheme, particularly as an article advertised under their 1-cent sale cannot be purchased at their stores at less than the full retail price at any time except on their sales days. As a matter of fact, the Riker-Hegeman Co. exact 10 cents for one can of soup at all times, except sales days, while the average retail grocer is selling a 10-cent article of that kind, as a rule, at three cans for 25 cents, or 8 cents per can.
> We have been careful not to sell the Riker-Hegeman Co. any product under the Van Camp label that has a fair distribution on this or any other market. You will notice that we have not sold this firm Van Camp's Milk, Van Camp's Pork and Beans, or any other article except, as stated above, soup and catsup, which are not stocked by the trade.
> The fact that we have not sold this firm any Van Camp products which are now handled and stocked by the retail grocery trade is not due to the fact that they did not ask us to sell it to them, but is due to the fact that we absolutely declined to sell them any article which had a fair distribution among the trade, or any article upon which we received a fair measure of co-operation from the grocery merchants.
> A merchant who has refused to stock and carry Van Camp's Soup and Van Camp's Catsup, but carries only competitive brands, has no just or fair cause for complaint. As a matter of necessity we are obliged to sell our products to such people who are willing to buy them. If we were compelled to stop entirely the sale of an article simply because a number of retail grocers refused to handle it, we would be the ones who would be harmed and not the retail grocer.
> VAN CAMP PRODUCTS CO.

Many other letters of similar tenor were received. The reading of the above inspires the following reflections:—

1—It seems to take the attitude that the grocers who sell the Van Camp products which were cut, are only entitled to protection from wildcat drug store competition when there are quite a number of them. If only a few faithful grocers have started in to handle the goods, they are entitled to no protection whatever.

2—If the Van Camp Company is seeking a way to forever prevent the grocery trade from taking up the products it names, it would see as if this plan of authorizing cu price drug stores to slaughter the would be fairly effective.

3—If grocers really prefer selli other brands of soup and catsup cost, to selling Van Camp's at profit, it would appear on t surface as if there were somethi very wrong with Van Camp's.

Is This Good Beef Cutting?

A test of a 140-pound hind of b made by the Chicago Retail Butche Association was presented at Omaha cently for discussion. Fifteen and o half cents per pound was paid for t hind and after every available part w weighed and priced the following ta will demonstrate what the butcher wo receive for the hind at these prices:—

Tip, 30 lbs., at 25 cents.....	$7 5
Flank trimmings for hamburg, at 2 10-16 cents.....	3
Suet, 2 12-16 lbs., at 8 cents..	2
Kidney, 1 lb., at 10 cents.....	1
Flank, 4 4-16 lbs., at 15 cents.	6
Flank steak, 2 lbs., at 20 cents,	4
Sirloin, 16 9-16 lbs., at 25 cents	4 1
Rump, 19 lbs., at 20 cents....	3 8

Bone, 7¾ lbs., at 4 cents.....	3

Any butcher can take his pencil a make deductions to arrive at what pr was made, taking into considerat time of cutting, delivery charges, cost, rent, cost of wrapping paper a several items of expense not mentio that every butcher must allow for. T shows a profit of less than 2 per c on cost.

The Science of Retail Advertising

This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon reguest, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up in strict rotation.

Shepherdstown, Pa., August 25, 1916.
Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Inclosed you will find a letter which I have been thinking of mailing to my customers. I will use a mimeograph in writing these letters and will use the inclosed blank form for this purpose. There are about forty families within a quarter mile of this store and a good agricultural country surrounding this place. Shepherdstown is nine miles from Harrisburg and three miles from Mechanicsburg.

Will you please examine the inclosed letter and make the necessary corrections, or write a letter that would be your choice, considering what I have told you. I have not done very much advertising of this kind and would like your opinion of it. There are about four newspapers in this territory, but would be expensive to advertise in all of them and otherwise could not reach all of the families in this territory.

Your kindness in this affair will be greatly appreciated and will thank you for any information you can give. Yours truly,

M. E. SPAHR.

Mr. Spahr has been given a personal letter of advice, but for the general good I will discuss the matter a little here. I reproduce the letter which he intends to send out:

Shepherdstown, Pa., August 25, 1916.

Dear Friend:—In looking over my stock of shoes, I find many numbers I am compelled to drop, owing to scarcity and advance in all kinds of leather. These numbers comprise shoes for men, women, children and infants. Many of these shoes are better value than can be purchased for the same price on to-day's market, and will be sold at a price, in order to close out quickly, that will be a saving to you of 25 cents to one dollar per pair.

Thanking you for your patronage in the past and soliciting your future orders, which will have our careful attention,

Yours truly,
M. E. SPAHR.

I have written Mr. Spahr that I consider this letter much too general. If I were a farmer, living some distance from this store, and got one of these letters, I should probably not be tempted to go any further with it, even if I needed a pair of shoes. I think some inkling ought to be given of what he has. I don't suppose there will be a great lot of offerings in this sale. It would hardly take a lot of space to describe some of them. The introduction is all right, but I should have followed it up by describing at least six sample offerings, two for men, two for women, and two for children. For instance:—

Men's High Tan Shoes

I can't get any more of these shoes, so I am going to cut the price of the few pairs I have to move them quickly. I have most sizes, but only a few pairs all told. An exclusive looking boot, in dark tan, flat sole, splendid last and leather. Can be worn all winter. I never sold a pair under $4, and they were closely priced at that.

All I Have Left $2.95

Some merchants think it good business to make a letter of this sort general, believing people will come in anyway and if they don't find what they want, will buy something else. These dealers argue that if you are specific, tell all the sizes and carefully describe everything, customers won't come in if they don't see what they want among your description. I don't agree with this. I think more people are apt to say, when they get a general letter, "Oh, they're sure not to have what I want," and stay away altogether.

It isn't reasonable to expect the same pay for one minute's work as for ten minutes' work.

If a retailer gets half as much profit for his one minute's work in selling an advertised brand, that he gets for his ten minutes' effort to sell an unknown and unwanted brand, he is obviously making more money out of the advertised brand than he is out of the unknown brand.

In selling goods, time is money.

BABBITT'S
PURE CONCENTRATED LYE

"Keeps its strength to the greatest length"

and that's why consumers know it's "The Lye to Buy." There are many uses for lye and its virtue all lies in the way it is made, just as its sale depends on the way it's advertised. We keep up its quality and strength. It is unequalled as a home soap maker, disinfectant and deodorizer. The new sifter top tin makes it handy for the consumer to use. Call your customers' attention to this new package and you have additional sales and profits. The Trade Marks are good for valuable and useful presents.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

¶ The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

Will Try to Ship Fresh Fish by Parcels Post

A Rumor That Certain Large Fresh Fish Jobbers Will Adopt the Method in Successful Use in England. Object Is to Build Up a Better Fish Trade in the Interior. How the English Plan Is Operated.

It is reported that some of the large wholesale dealers in fresh fish will shortly try the method of shipping fresh fish by parcels post, after the system which has been in successful vogue in England for several years. The English fish men ship direct to consumers, but it is understood that the American jobbers will first attempt to ship to retailers. They contend that the sale of fresh fish is very poor in the inland, because of the difficulty of getting supplies. If the business could be built up there, the entire industry would be benefited.

In England the main center of the parcels post fish business is Grimsby, where a group of fish merchants devote themselves to this special business, dispatching daily hundreds or even thousands of parcels, the majority of which are less than 6 pounds in weight when fully packed for shipment. These packages go forward either by passenger train under a special low rate for small parcels granted by the railway companies (this service being analogous to that of express companies in the United States) or by parcels post.

Fish goes by parcels post on the same terms as any other goods. The rates for all parcels are: Not exceeding 1 pound, 8 cents; between 1 and 2 pounds, 10 cents; between 2 and 3 pounds, 12 cents; between 3 and 5 pounds, 14 cents; between 5 and 7 pounds, 16 cents; and 2 cents per pound for every additional pound up to 11 pounds, which is the maximum weight of any parcel sent by post. These rates, of course, are for any distance in Great Britain and Ireland and include delivery to residence.

As the fish parcels are handled by the post office in the same service with other parcels, the fish must be so packed that the parcel remains dry. This excludes the possibility of icing, and in the warmer weather makes it desirable to forward by parcels post nothing except very fresh fish sent out in the afternoon for delivery early next morning.

From November to March no ice is required for these shipments, and, in fact, the average temperature in the United Kingdom even in the summer rarely rises to such a point as to make ice absolutely necessary to carry perfectly fresh fish through a one-night journey.

The fish are wrapped in paper and then put in a woven straw bag called a bass, which is fastened up. This is all the packing. Before the war fish was wrapped in a special paper sometimes referred to as "vegetable parchment," sometimes as "solling paper." This is not now obtainable, probably because manufactured on the Continent. If ice is needed it is put in the bass with the fish. Then, of course, the parcel has to go by rail as the post office will tolerate no leakage.

A leading Grimsby house in the small parcel direct to consumer trade states that the average weight of its parcels is 5 to 6 pounds. Consumers who want a small parcel of fish send, say, 60 or 75 cents to one of the houses engaged in the business, requesting that a parcel be sent them. The merchant makes up a parcel accordingly and despatches it by rail or post as may suit the case. Of course, these fish merchants have many regular customers with whom they carry accounts, but the proper course for a stranger would be to send them some small sum with some indication of the kind of fish required.

Only the freshest fish are selected for this sort of shipment.

Those who have studied the matter say there is no reason why fresh fish cannot be sent by parcels post in this country.

Baked Bean Men Raise Interesting Question.

The outcome of a case brought by the United States Government against the Oceana Canning Co., of Shelby, Mich., for violation of the pure food law will likely have an important bearing on future bean prices. The Government authorities say that this concern packed "anthracnose" beans, which they declare are unfit for human food and the case will be a test as to whether a considerable portion of the bean crop of Michigan is to be rejected. Michigan bean men have united to fight the case. The bean, akin to all forms of vegetable life, is heir to ills. "Anthracnose" is one of them. It is a fungus germ disease which usually attacks the pod, and if severe, eats its way through and leaves its mark on the enamel of the matured bean. It has probably existed as long as the bean has been under cultivation. The Government pure food experts say the anthracnose bean is a decomposed bean and as such is deleterious to health and unfit for food. Not long ago, on these grounds, they seized a shipment of canned beans from the Oceana Co. The officials of the company protested. They admitted that the disease left its black mark on the bean, but argued that the weight of scientific authority proved that the eating of anthracnose beans had never had ill effect on man or beast. They said that while it may not be as good looking as a bean unsullied by anthracnose, yet its food properties were not diminished and that it should not be driven from the market. Throwing out the anthracnose beans, say the growers, is going to have the effect of materially decreasing the production of marketable beans. The disease has been quite prevalent for the last two or three years and casting aside as unfit a few bushels from each acre's yield is going to count up in the aggregate to several hundreds of thousands of bushels. It may total up in a year to 15 or 20 per cent. of the whole crop. Then, too, they say, if the grower proceeds to hand picking for the elimination of the anthracnose bean, the cost of handling the crop is going to increase considerably and the additional cost is bound to be figured into the price which the consumer will be asked to pay.

Pretty Bad Report of the Way Food Products Are Handled at Retail in Philadelphia.

Municipal Research Bureau Examines Ten Hundred and Thirty Stores and Finds Average Condition Dirty and Methods Sloppy. Retailers Too Ready to Leave Foods Open to Dust and Contamination.

The Philadelphia Bureau of Municipal Research has just completed an examination into the way Philadelphia retail dealers in meats, fish, dairy products and groceries do their business, from the special standpoint of cleanliness. All told 1,030 stores were examined in all sections of the city. The small stores run by foreigners in the southern section of the city were the worst. But over half were found unsatisfactory, according to the report.

The following are some of the high lights:—

Particularly in the southern section of the city there was absolutely no screening and covering of foods. Raisins, currants, crackers, rice, beans and many other dry groceries, as well as fruits, vegetables and breadstuffs, are displayed along the sidewalk outside of the shops. Meat also is often similarly exposed, and, worse still, offered for sale side by side with live poultry.

People wearing filthy clothes and with grimy hands serve the public in these shops and, as a rule, wrap up their commodities in newspapers—a practice which is prohibited by the Bureau of Health.

The inspection force is too small—four veterinarians obviously cannot inspect all animals slaughtered at sixty-eight different slaughter houses the way they are distributed over Philadelphia.

In many instances the housewives themselves are to blame for dirty food products. This is particularly true in the Municipal Markets. Customers finger the food and brush against it as they pass, for the aisles between stalls are narrow and very often crowded. Dogs and cats have easy access, in fact, there is no way to keep them out and much to attract them.

Large halves of mutton were hanging out on the open side of the market above the gutter, and they were dry and dirty looking. Vegetables are often piled directly upon the ground, and dressed fowl hang along the edges of the market directly over filthy gutters and so low that people entering the market constantly brush against them.

People expectorate in storerooms. Evidences of expectoration were very prevalent in about 40 per cent. of the stores investigated. Many women were seen poking or pinching meat before purchasing it, a dangerous as well as a disgusting practice.

In only 52 per cent. of the stores studied was provision made for covering foods requiring it with net screens or glass cases, the investigators found.

This lack of screening or covering the food to protect it from domestic animals, flies and other insects and from handling by prospective buyers, is one of the worst conditions in stores and a very general one throughout the city.

Practically all kinds of food are exposed in the stores—meat, fish, poultry, vegetables, fruit, dried fruits and vegetables, milk, confectionery, bread, etc. Many also are on the streets without protection, particularly fruit and vegetables, dried fruits and poultry. These foods, even though they may be washed and well cooked before they are eaten, very often have the dirt so ground into them that it is practically impossible to wash them clean.

A special study was made of the condition under which food is stored over night, or for longer periods, when it is bought in large quantities. In only a few cases was it found to be kept in clean places specially provided for this purpose. Far more often it is stored in filthy cellars, or in kitchens, piled up on chairs, or even in bedrooms. In a number of cases it is left in the carts, which stand out almost anywhere, in yards or alleys, or in push cart stables, covered with soiled strips of oil cloth.

The local Bureau of Health already enforcing an ordinance compelling dealers who display food products on the sidewalk to cover them up. Exception is made of such products as potatoes, which have to be washed and cooked before being eaten.

We don't need to tell you anything about bulk goods

You don't try to sell nameless "barrel" soda crackers. You sell Uneeda or Sunshine—in a protected package. Because it is the better way, the right way, the profitable way. Because your customers demand package goods.

Well, every reason that says it is good business to sell other goods in a sealed package doubly applies to tea.

Loose tea very easily loses its fragrance, flavor and strength—tea exposed and sold loose from bins or in paper bags or pasteboard boxes cannot be worth the price asked because its strength, its refreshing properties in flavor are gone.

We don't stop by telling you about Lipton's Tea. We tell your customer the advantages of package tea in general, and Lipton's Tea in particular. We are doing our part to educate her to ask for package tea, to ask for Lipton's Tea. We are helping you to make the sale.

A Mean Fighter.

I have had quite some fighting experience in my time, have made some fights and seen some more, and one of the meanest fighters I have ever seen is E. A. Whittier, secretary of the American Fair Trade League. The league is an aggregation of manufacturers who want the Stevens bill passed, so that they will have the right to fix the wholesale and retail selling price of their products. The present law denies them this.

Whittier is the secretary, manager and press agent of this organization and he is fighting for the Stevens bill night and day. If he would only fight fair, his energy would arouse general admiration. But he puts up the meanest kind of a fight. Everybody who disagrees with him is a liar, or a crook, or a fool, or is actuated by some corrupt motive. Only he, the infallible and impeccable Whittier, can possibly be right. Because I had the temerity, in some syndicate articles on law which I wrote, to point out what I considered some weak places in the bill, Whittier wrote to trade papers all over the country that I was representing price-cutters, and that what I had written was not what I really thought, but what I was paid to say. The man lied absolutely when he said that, and he knew he lied.

He is in the same kind of controversy now with Harry B. Haines, editor of the Paterson (N. J.) "Evening News" and secretary of the National Premium Advertisers' Association. Mr. Haines has sued him for $50,000 damages for defamation of character. He says: "In this suit I hope to bring the American Fair Trade League to the realization of the fact that they cannot go on attacking the character and business integrity of a man simply because they disagree with him on the economics of their bill." But it isn't really the American Fair Trade League that does and writes these contemptible things. It is Whittier, who seems to have no conception of what a fair fight means. If I were the American Fair Trade League and had the stiff fight on my hands that the league has, I wouldn't let a man like Whittier work for me for five minutes. That job needs a gentleman and a diplomat; Whittier is a bigoted and bad-mannered little bully.

The Proposed Advance in Bread.

Anybody who has watched the hue and cry over the proposal of the manufacturers of bread to advance the price, cannot but feel that the Lord gave a lot of people sawdust instead of brains. Not first grade sawdust either. The Federal Trade Commission, which is a department of the United States Government, has joined in the hue and cry, incidentally, and its utterances on the subject have been not a particle more logical than all of the others.

The bakers' position is told briefly in another column. Flour has advanced, (100 to 124 per cent.), sugar has advanced, salt has advanced, paper has advanced, milk has advanced, lard has advanced, taxes have advanced, labor has advanced. The bakers say "bread must advance also," and who can deny their right to say so? The interests that are opposing the advance do not discuss the advance on its merits at all; they merely talk monopoly and restraint of trade. Not one of them, so far as I have seen, has attempted to learn for himself whether there was any reason in the baker's position; the very thought of any advance made them see red.

The bakers ought to pay as much attention to these d. f's. as they pay to a last year's weather report.

The Remedy.

Mr. Edward N. Hurley, chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, in addressing the Ohio Bankers' Association last Wednesday, said this:—

> Let me say right here that I do not believe in agreements to fix prices. I have no sympathy for associations or combinations that attempt it. In the first place, it is illegal, and in the second place, even if it were legal, it would still be a bad thing. It simply covers up inefficiencies instead of getting rid of them. It is not a remedy for the disease that ails business. It is merely an opiate.

This is very fine talk, but what would Mr. Hurley's "remedy" be? Suppose I took him into a town which had room for say fifteen grocers, but where there were half as many again or twice as many. To sell at all, a lot of them were compelled to sell cheap. Trade was reduced to complete demoralization and only a very few grocers were doing a comfortable business and making a comfortable living. Either of two things would relieve the trade of that town from its depression: 1, an agreement among the grocers not to sell below certain prices; or 2, the elimination of half of them. If Mr. Hurley says No. 2 is his remedy, I say it is mine too and I tell him to go to it and apply it. If he agrees with me that No. 2 is impracticable, and that No. 1 is illegal, then he is back where he started from.

A Good Thing—But It Won't Be Done.

Just look what the grocers of Stillwater, Minn., have done. They listened to a talk on slack credits by the secretary of the Minnesota Retail Grocers' Association and immediately adopted a resolution which they published in their local papers, demanding payments of all accounts "in full on the same day or day after a customer gets his pay whether it is weekly, semi-monthly or monthly, and in no case will credit be extended if the previous month's bill has not been paid on or

Nobody Can Write a Better Editorial Than This

Sharpsburg, Ky., Sept. 12, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I was very much impressed when I read on your editorial page the story of "Thief." Some retailers I feel sure take advantage of jobbers in this way. Here's my motto, and my platform:—

HONEST

I am a retailer who believes in giving everybody a square deal—jobbers, manufacturers and consumers. I believe it is right to treat the jobber squarely even if he does get the better of me. His mistakes are usually made by careless employees. I want the jobber to have a good profit, but no more than his competitors get.

It's up to me to keep posted.

If I made a claim on a jobber for a shortage in a certain shipment and found it later, I would report it. Just last week a certain large firm billed to me one dozen novelties, 95 cents, and shipped to me one gross, the price for all being 95 cents instead of $11.40. I immediately notified this firm and they replied, thanking me in the letter three times for reporting same. Don't you know that house will always have confidence in me?

All jobbers want our business, but how long would they want it if they thought we would steal from them?

I can always compete with chain stores and know I buy my goods right.

For absolute success give the jobber, manufacturer and consumer a square deal—Honesty.

Yours truly,

O. H. KNIGHT.

ore the tenth of the month fol-ving purchase."

A good thought, but will it be ried out? If it is, it is the first ie in the history of the human e. Some members of the Still-ter Association will carry it out the letter, others will carry it out h certain customers, others will ry it out for one day. That it l be carried out fully by every-ly who has subscribed to it is im-ssible, judging by the universal tory of such movements.

Why? Because, like everybody e, the Stillwater merchants need siness too badly.

olish This Old Custom

The Philadelphia Bureau of nicipal Research, after visiting 1,030 retail dealers in fish, meats, groceries and candy, finds that r half were dirty and that foods d by them were unfit to sell. sorts of delicate and corruptible ds like meat, poultry, macaroni l many other things were freely osed to the dust, and to animals, only in the stores, but on the eet. Customers were permitted handle all manner of things with their filthy fingers, human swine expectorated around the stock, and on many food products exposed for sale the dirt was so ground in that it looked like a hopeless case to ever get it out.

It would seem as if such a condition must surely have something to do with the epidemic of infantile paralysis, but that is not what I started out to say. It was to emphasize the absurdity of the old custom of displaying perishable food products in front of grocery stores. Very few thoughtful grocers do that any more, but there is still a surprisingly large number of the other kind that do. Some do it because they haven't room inside, but some do it voluntarily. They carry out a huge raft of stuff every morning and carry it in again at night, thinking it a good advertisement.

I should think it a very bad advertisement. Green vegetables, perhaps moist when put out, get dusty very quickly and their charm is gone. Dogs pay their respects. Everything conspires to make things put on the street look jaded and faded and poor. I have seen many grocers actually display open boxes of dried fruit and open kegs of pickles on the street. In Heaven's name why? There is no advertising in that, and no invitation, because if there is a grocery sign out everybody knows the store will keep dried fruit and pickles. And incidentally everybody would prefer getting them on the inside, too.

The old outside display scheme was never very intelligent, but it is positively foolish to-day. A dealer in perishable products must protect his stock in every way he can. The trend of the law is that way and the trend of consumers' taste is that way. So is the trend of economy. The completest way to do it is to sell as many package goods as possible—they carry their own protection.

Recommend Abolition of Five-Cent Loaf of Bread.

Recommendations to all bakers of the United States that the 5-cent loaf of bread be abandoned and the 10-cent loaf standardized, were made after considerable discussion at the closing session of the Executive Committee of the National Association of Master Bakers in Chicago last week. The convention urged the recommendations be put into effect immediately. Economic waste incident to the manufacture of the 5-cent loaf was emphasized as a reason for its discontinuance. Saving in manufacture, improvement in quality and standardization are urged in favor of the 10-cent loaf. It is also recommended that where local conditions make it necessary, the smaller loaf may be maintained, with a price consistent with the cost of manufacture. The bakers cited the following percentages of increase in cost of ingredients in the manufacture of bread within the past two years: Patent flour, 100 per cent.; rye, 124 per cent.; sugar, 66 per cent.; shortening, 60 per cent.; milk, 40 per cent.; salt, 14 per cent.; wrapping paper, 70 per cent. Delivery costs also have increased, it was stated, through an advance of 100 per cent. in the price of gasoline and of 25 per cent. in feed for horses. The conference in Chicago was an outgrowth of the Bakers' National Convention at Salt Lake City, at which informal resolutions to the same effect were voted. Already the price of bread has been advanced, or the 5-cent loaf abandoned, in several cities. At one time there were threats of a Government investigation of a concerted movement to increase the price.

Grocery Clerks' Strike Collapses. Money in Condensed Milk Business Now. Local Bread Men Knock an Ounce Off Their Five-Cent Loaves. Western Canners Say Bean Crop Not Short. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, Sept. 15, 1916.

The strike of the local grocery clerks, which was referred to last week, was an absolute failure. Only the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. had any trouble at all, and even that concern did not have enough to interfere with business. Only the merest handful of clerks left their work and many of them have come back.

A well-known condensed milk man, interviewed during the week, said that, in his judgment, the American manufacturers of condensed milk were making more money to-day than they have for a long time. This man cited one of his own brands to show the advance up to date. Ordinarily it sold for $2.85 a case, but it was now $3.75, while milk, the raw material, had not advanced in any large degree. The war has enabled the American condensed milk manufacturers to pull their business out of the slough of despond in which it had sunk on account of excessive competition. It has brought thousands of dollars worth of orders from abroad and has made the manufacturers very independent. Some of them, however, have now stopped filling foreign orders and are confining themselves to domestic business. A curious incident, showing the effect of the war upon the market, was related. The quantity of Holland condensed milk, which had started to figure in this country quite importantly before the war broke out, was sent over here some time before the opening of the conflict. It did not sell very readily for some reason, and a year later was bought up in this country at $1 a case more than the holders had paid for it, and reshipped abroad.

A letter to the local manager of the J. C. Blooker Co., received during the week, states that the export of cocoa is now prohibited, and only by favor and special work with the Dutch Government have foreign cocoa manufacturers been able to send any out of their own country. The manufacturers say they are having a great deal of trouble in getting sufficient raw material. As a result regular shipments of foreign chocolate and cocoa are very unlikely.

The local bakers have lowered the weight of their 5-cent loaf one ounce and of their 10-cent loaf two ounces. They consider this easier than eliminating the 5-cent loaf entirely.

The Gibson Canning Co., of Gibson, Ind., in writing to the "Journal of Commerce," denies that the bean crop is short or that the very high present prices are the result of any such shortage as the trade in the East have been led to believe. The Gibson Company says that the acreage in beans is larger than in any previous year. Early in the season the crop promised to be enormous, but later bad weather interfered somewhat and the crop will now not be large but will certainly be good. A peculiarity of the crop now being harvested is the very fine quality, being unusually free of faulty beans.

Stockholders of the Union Bag and Paper Co. on Thursday last voted to accept the proposed merger with the Riegel Bag Co. The consolidated company will be known as the Union Bag and Paper Corporation, with a capital stock of $10,000,000 of only one class.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Tea moderately active for the season, with no change in price. Green teas have advanced in the Far East under heavy Russian buying and high exchange.—Coffee a little easier on account of heavy Brazil advices. The recent sharp advance checked buying, which is still light. Milds quiet and dull. Java and Mocha unchanged.—Sugar higher and firmer than a week ago, refiners mostly quoting 6.40 for granulated. Domestic beet granulated is now quoted at 6.20 west of Pittsburgh. No quotations for Eastern points as yet. Raws show an advance of about 1/8 cent for the week. Demand for sugar good.—Prunes stronger and are now generally quoted on 5½-cent basis, which is an advance of ¾ cent from the lowest point; some buying for export.—Peaches and apricots both dull.—Seeded raisins are feeling firm, and currants very high and firm.—California almonds advanced during the week 1 cent a pound over the opening. There was a heavy demand and prices were withdrawn.—Tomatoes firmer on about 90 cents basis for Maryland 3s. Buyers have not much confidence in the market as the pack still looks good.—Corn very firm and high. Maine pack situation favorable up to date.—Salmon very strong and tending higher on short pack reports. Pink salmon particularly scarce and as much as $1.10 being asked here.—Sardines are also firm.—Wheat closes the week with somewhat of a break on account of heavy pressure to sell.—Flour shows an advance of 40 cents per barrel during the week, in spite of the decline in wheat.

ITEMS OF GENERAL INTEREST.

The Week's Dry Goods Review.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Wholesale shipments of dry goods for the current week show very large gains over the corresponding period of a year ago, indicating that retail distribution is quite active.

Road sales for fall and advance spring delivery are considerably ahead of the week of 1915.

More customers have been in the market.

Collections are much better than in the week a year ago.

The market on cotton goods, as well as many other lines, is strong and active.

Porto Rico Will Try to Get American Trade to Push Porto Rico Coffee.

The Insular Chamber of Commerce, composed of local business organizations in the six largest cities of Porto Rico, co-operating with the National Coffee Growers' Association, at its annual meeting just closed, decided to send a representative to the United States to visit the various chambers of commerce, boards of trade and other business organizations, in an effort to arouse interest in obtaining a market for Porto Rican coffee in the United States and to otherwise work for the upbuilding and protection of this industry. Coffee men assert the industry is languishing chiefly because the island cannot sell its coffee in Cuba and Spain, its two best markets, as favorably now as during the Spanish régime, when concessions were made to products from the Spanish colonies, and also because a satisfactory American market has not been developed. In the year ending June 30, 1916, Porto Rico exported 31,634,975 pounds of coffee, valued at $4,976,288, to foreign countries, and 509,158 pounds, valued at $77,965, to the United States. Cuba purchased 18,521,991 pounds for $2,739,549; Spain, 7,454,410 pounds, valued at $1,242,715. Italy, France and Sweden were the next largest buyers.

Vegetable Grower Can't Sell to Anybody But the Packer He Has Agreed to Sell To.

Edgar F. Hurff, who operates a large cannery at Swedesboro, N. J., and who made contracts with a number of growers to deliver vegetables to him, found that two men had been picking peppers and selling them in the open market. Hurff applied to the Court of Chancery for an injunction to restrain them, and the court ruled that the growers were restrained from selling any peppers to other than Hurff.

A Little Lesson on Salmon.

There are five grades or kinds of salmon taken on the Pacific coast. The king salmon, otherwise known as spring on Puget Sound and Chinook on the Columbia River, has a pale to deep pink color and is of fine flavor. The sockeye or red salmon is caught on Puget Sound, in the Columbia river and along the Alaskan coast. The flesh of the sockeye is firm and of a rich, deep red color and fine flavor. The coho or silver salmon is a good food fish with a firm, solid flesh. It does not, however, retain its red color in the can. The humpback salmon, usually labeled "pink," is the smallest salmon. It stands well as a good fish, although its flesh is not as solid as that of the other varieties. The chum or keta salmon is another low-priced fish of good quality and is high in nutritive value. It does not, however, show the red color after cooking. The best grades of canned salmon are richer than meats in body building material and contain about the same amount of fats. Canned salmon is as digestible as the best sirloin steak. It is free from waste and nothing need be thrown away except the can. Practically all canned salmon is prepared on the Pacific coast and most of it north of the Columbia River far up into the ice strewn waters of the Alaskan peninsula. The work of canning has been so improved that it is now carried on with the most sanitary methods.

Pennsylvania News Items.

At their convention in Harrisburg on Thursday last the Pennsylvania State Association of Sealers of Weights and Measures adopted a resolution calling on the Legislature to give them power to regulate the sale of bread in Pennsylvania.

There was another decision in the Pennsylvania cold storage food law of 1913, handed down duri week. The court was the Com- 1 Pleas Court of Dauphin nty, and it dismissed the suit ught several months ago by the nsylvania Cold Storage and rket Co., Industrial Cold Stor- and Warehouse Co., Pennsyl- ia Warehousing and Cold Stor- age Co. and the Wholesale Fish Dealers' Protective Association. These plaintiffs contended that the law was unconstitutional, but the court held that they should have raised the question by appealing from penalties imposed under the law.

Some More of the Answers Received.

1. Is there plenty of money in your rritory?
2. Are the people employed?
3. Are your collections good?
4. Are you suffering from chain ore competition?
5. On the whole, do you expect our business to be as good, or etter, or not as good, as last Fall's usiness?

Here goes for answers to your estions:—
1.—Yes; never more plentiful.
2.—Every person who can work d wants to work has plenty to do, d then there is a shortage of borers.
3.—Good.
4.—No chain stores; a few cut ice stores, but they cut no figure hen times are good.
5.—On the whole, I expect to do more business this fall than last, besides having a next-door competitor. My business this year up to this time is about 33⅓ per cent. over last year without any special efforts of mine, and even no paper advertising. We know that in good times it is easier to do business, therefore we find more parlor stores (or small stores) spring up just like mushrooms, which is mostly due to the fact that our wholesale houses get on the retail basis of doing business and sell in units in place of cases.

In reply to your list of questions, will answer them in order:
1.—Yes, the people generally have as much or more than previous years.
2.—Yes, everybody working and some more could be used; in fact, some factories are having difficulty to get help enough.
3.—As good or better than ordinary. My own collections have not been so good as now during the last five years.
4.—The A. & P. Tea Co. has a store here which is doing some business, and I understand has taken some of the trade of others, but has not affected me any, my business having shown a substantial increase each month and year over the corresponding month and year previous. The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market during the week s remained absolutely unchanged. the other side some grades of eens are a trifle higher, but this s had, and will have, no effect on our market. The entire line is changed for the week, demand ht.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos ffee has not been quite so strong ring the week. News from Bra- was less firm, as the rumored p damage is now said to have en unfounded. This has created easier feeling, although not any rticular decline. Some holders ll shade Brazil coffees a trifle. lds are unchanged in price, al- ough inclined to be weak and in ht demand. Java and Mocha un- nged and quiet.

Sugar.

There has been a slight advance sugar during the week due to vance in raws. The raw market not very certain, but perhaps it an eighth of a cent higher than a ek ago. In consequence, granu- ed has advanced from 10 to 15 nts. The consumptive demand sugar is now very good. It es not seem likely there will be heavy advance because domes- beet granulated will be coming ward very shortly, and that un- ubtedly will keep the market vn. Already it is quoted 20 nts below the Eastern price.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose unchanged and dull, but y high. Compound syrup dull comparatively high, as is sugar up. Molasses is beginning to w some demand, but of course new season is not yet started.

Fish.

Shore mackerel remains exactly it was a week ago. The supply comparatively light and the price h. No new Norway mackerel been offered in this country as and it is now beginning to be eved that there may be little or e. Some autumn Irish mackerel been offered at very stiff prices. ere seems to be no trouble to sell ckerel even at the high prices. l, hake and haddock are all very high, with a firm outlook. The New England curers of cod and similar fish can make more money by hard curing their fish and send- ing them abroad, and many are doing it. Cod is 4 to 5 cents per pound above normal. Hake and haddock are relatively in the same condition. Salmon is very firm on account of light supplies. Buyers are complaining a great deal be- cause they have not been able to have all their orders confirmed. Domestic sardines are very scarce and very firm; $2.90 per case is now asked for quarter oils in a large way. Imported sardines all un- changed and firm.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are firmer and higher and the best that can be done now is 90 cents in a large way f. o. b. factory for Maryland 3s. Plenty of goods are being packed and the sea- son has not been materially inter- fered with yet. Packers are not pressing for sale and this is caus- ing the present firmness. The de- mand is poor. Corn is very firm and second hands holders have made sales at 80 cents of a grade which opened at 60 cents. High prices are undoubtedly certain for corn during the coming season. Peas are also firm, but in very moderate demand just now. Apples unchanged and dull. California canned goods are selling right along, but in a comparatively small way. Prices unchanged. As to small Eastern staple canned goods, spinach is nearly cleaned up and packers are asking $1 in a large way for what they have. Sauer kraut is now quoted at 90 cents a dozen as against a normal price of 60 cents.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are very firm and show a fractional advance. The present basis price is 5¼ to 5⅜, which is ½ to ⅝ cent higher than the low- est point. If the growers' combina- tion goes through, prunes will un- doubtedly hold their present price. Peaches and apricots show no change and light demand. Seeded raisins are sold up and the situ- ation is firm. Other raisins un- changed. Currants are exceedingly

BURK'S

Meat Loaf

SEASONABLE THROUGHOUT THE YEAR

Composed entirely of fine selected meats—contains no flour or cereals. Baked fresh daily in loaves of about six pounds.

Makes a quick and delicious breakfast sliced and fried in a little butter.

Can also be served cold for luncheon, cut in thin slices or warmed in the oven in one piece to take the place of a roast.

BURK'S

Lunch Roll

(Copyrighted)

SUBSTITUTE FOR BOILED HAM

Composed of lean, tender pieces of pork, mildly cured, stuffed in linen container and boiled.

Far superior and more delicious than boneless boiled ham, being juicy, mild and sweet; also less expensive and not near so wasteful—in fact no waste at all. Much finer in texture and just as easily sliced, or more so, as this can be done in a slicing machine.

The cover is readily removed by cutting the seam and then stripping off the sack as the roll is consumed. This prevents it becoming dry and is a sanitary feature that appeals to the consumer, as it keeps the product clean while displayed on the counter and untouched by hand while slicing, a vast improvement as compared with handling the greasy, unprotected boneless boiled ham.

MEAT LOAF and LUNCH ROLL were originated by us, now imitated by others, but none equal to Burk's, which are prepared from only the choicest materials.

LOUIS BURK

Girard Avenue and Third Street

high and are quoted at 15 cents a pound in a large way.

Beans and Peas.

The crop outlook in Michigan is better than it was last week, and pea beans are now quoted at $5 to $5.50 a bushel in a large way. This means that the market is weaker than it was last week. Marrows are unchanged from last week and so are California limas. Green and Scotch peas unchanged and dull.

Butter.

The butter market is firm, after a decline of 1 cent. The demand has increased and high prices are now expected. The decline was due to the fact that the expected railroad strike had caused holders to stock up a little ahead, and the elimination of the strike left them with a surplus. This has now been cleaned up and the situation is firm again. Exporters are back in the market after stopping for a while. The withdrawals from storage are heavier this season, and the whole situation is very firm.

Eggs.

The egg market is very firm, with a good consumptive demand. No change has occurred in fresh eggs during the week, but storage eggs have advanced 1 cent owing to the heavy demand for them. There is no speculative buying to speak of and the market appears to be thoroughly healthy. Fresh eggs are getting better on account of cooler weather, and there is no reason to expect much higher prices.

Cheese.

The cheese market is very firm at an advance of ½ cent, largely due to the continuance of the large export demand. The home demand is also good, while the receipts are only moderate. Current arrivals of cheese are showing their usual good September quality, and the increase in the make is bought up from day to-day. Probably prices will not decline for some little time.

Provisions.

The price of smoked meats, including picnic, regular and skinned back hams, bellies and bacon, has advanced from 1 to 1½ cents during the week, due to the short supply of hogs and the heavy demand. Lard shows an advance of 1¼ to 1½ cents from the same cause. This makes pure lard about 2 cents above normal, and probably it will not go very much higher, as they start to kill hogs in October. Compound lard is from ½ to ¾ cent up during the week, largely on accou of sympathy with pure. Dried b shows 1 to 2 cents advance, d to the short supply; demand f Barreled pork is firm but u changed, with a good dema Canned meats are also firm and u changed.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPOR

Foreign Grocery Specialties.

Olive oil continues its trend towa a higher price level. Both Italy Spain report fears of a poor crop. demand continues excellent. The fi qualities of edible olive oil are grow scarcer every day.

Spanish Pimentos (Red Peppers Prices are unchanged—stocks are g ually going into consumption, so supplies which are not likely to re here before late this year will fin market practically bare of all kinds Spanish red peppers.

STROHMEYER & ARPE C New York.

Imported Fish Specialties.

The market for herrings has sh a decided improvement in the last w and prices are decidedly firmer. Government of Scandinavia ha practically prohibited the export mackerel, it certainly looks doubtfu there will be any new Norway m erel for sale in the United States coming season. We have petitioned Norwegian Government to allow friends abroad to ship some of mackerel to us, and expect a deci before long. Even if mackerel sh be allowed to come here, it will tainly mean higher prices.

A steamer is now about to l Iceland carrying a full cargo of Iceland fat herrings for us, the qualit which is described to us by cable t exceptionally fine. The prices are a the same as last season.

Imported oil sardines continue in g demand. Norway cables report c very poor catch, in fact, it seems the catch of brisling has stopped denly, but it is hoped that the fish again appear before long. In Fr only very few sardines are being ca and those are too large in size t suitable for the American trade. Portugal the catch is barely satisfac Prices for all imported sardines re unchanged.

Norway stockfish of all kinds wi exceedingly scarce this season and l er in price than ever before, owin the extreme scarcity of this article.

STROHMEYER & ARPE C New York.

Wheat and Flour.

The Government report issued week confirms the most pessimistic ports of damage to the spring w crop. One month ago the Govern estimated the spring wheat crop 199,000,000 bushels and it is now duced to 156,000,000 bushels, w compares with 356,000,000 bushels vested last year. The total wheat duction in the United States is g as 611,000,000 bushels, exactly 400, 000 bushels less than last year. only when this enormous loss is co with the crop losses in Canada tha full significance of the wheat situ becomes apparent. The Canadian is 200,000,000 bushels less than last so that we have a shortage in N America of 600,000,000 bushels.

Of course the high price of wheat curtail consumption or else there w be none for export. Do you wo that Europe is uneasy about how necessities are to be met? The im g nations need 560,000,000 bushels of heat, of which they expect North merica to furnish one-half. In their ılculations they allow for full average ops in Argentina and India, which are long way from harvest—indeed the rgentina crop is in the grass stage ıd will not be harvested until Dember and the India crop is not yet the ground.

All eyes are turned on Argentina and crop failure there, on top of the dis-ter to the North American crop, ight change the fate of nations. We e confronting a dangerous situation dangerous to buyer and seller alike, it means wide fluctuations as the arcity becomes more apparent.

We sincerely hope that a general ace may soon come. Russia's bottled surplus is sorely needed and without hundreds of millions of people will ffer. We are sorry to say that we see tle hope for an early conclusion of the ar, certainly not until spring, if then, ıd in the meantime we will have exorted our surplus and be on a destic basis.

As we have previously stated, higher ices are inevitable.

SHANE BROS. & WILSON CO.

Spices.

The market continues fairly active, ith few changes in the prices of spices. eeds, however, have been fluctuating ıd very much higher prices are probble. The question of ocean freights likely to cut a figure during the fall onths.

Pepper.—The market is fairly active. oreign markets are again higher and ices are considerably in advance of ose named there. We believe that pper is likely to advance. White ppers have been in better request durg the week.

Red Peppers.—Prices generally steady d the demand fair.

Cloves.—Are in active demand at harning prices. Needs during this aumn will be large, and inasmuch as e crop is reported small, higher prices e probable.

Pimento (Allspice).—High in price. igher prices are quoted in Jamaica. he stocks there are held at a price gher than prices prevailing here.

Mace.—While in fair demand, is unanged in price.

Nutmegs.—Spot stocks are unchanged price. Futures are neglected. It is ally hard to predict the future of this ticle.

Cassias.—All grades will be affected the high freight rates and the diffilty of shipping in China. The tenncy is upward and supplies here have en very much reduced.

Gingers.—Steady and only in fair mand.

Tapiocas.—In good demand at unanged values.

The Ham Question

¶ More consumers are dissatisfied with the ham they get than with anything else in the grocer's line.

¶ Good ham is sweet, with a tangy saltiness, tender and close fleshed. Fried or broiled, it's as sweet as a nut, and if everybody could get that kind they'd eat ham ten times as often.

¶ The average ham is stringy and briny and tough. It doesn't suit it all, but by and by a lot of consumers come to believe all ham is like that.

¶ Vogt's Liberty Brand Hams are not like that. They are precisely the kind of hams we described in the second paragraph. It would be foolish to say this if it wasn't true, wouldn't it? You'll be glad you got in touch with Liberty Brand Hams and so will your customers.

¶ We are advertising them to your customers, by the way.

Daily Grocery Paper Wanted.

Statesboro, Ga., Sept. 5, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Please name some good daily papers confined to groceries, a daily grocery bulletin, also one or more grocery jobbers where I can get goods at first cost.

Yours truly,
H. Clark.

There is no daily paper or bulletin in the United States published in the interest of the grocery trade. The "Journal of Commerce of New York," a daily, carries a grocery market page.

As to wholesale grocers selling goods at first cost, there are several in the North which get along without salesmen, and profess to sell below the regular market. You could not buy of these, however, for the freights would be against you. There are no such jobbers, so far as we know, in the South, near you.

Another Victim.

Catawissa, Pa., Sept. 9, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We are being sued by the Puritan Manufacturing Co., of Iowa City, Iowa, for the collection of a note which we gave in securing one of their piano contest schemes about six years ago. We have in our possession copies of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" from the years 1910 and 1911, in which are published exposures of several of these schemes. In the issue of December 5, 1910, the Lyon-Taylor Co. vs. a woman shoe dealer. Could you inform us in what court this case was tried in and the name of the judge who handed down the decision? Also, if you could advise us of any other cases of a similar nature which have been tried in Pennsylvania courts so that we might obtain the court records of these cases. We would be very glad to remunerate you for your trouble.

Very truly yours,
H. R. Baldy.

Answer.—Mr. Baldy has been written that we unfortunately could not at this late date give him the facts he asks for about the case which was reported in 1910. The article did not supply sufficient details to enable the case to be looked up in a law library. There have been several such cases, but whether they apply to Mr. Baldy's case cannot be told without knowing more about it. He gives no facts whatever.

Without doubt the Puritan outfit have done the same thing these concerns always do—turned over Mr. Baldy's note to an "innocent third party," and the latter is now seeking to collect it. If that is so, his defense ought to be that the innocent third party was not an innocent third party at all, but was merely a confederate of the Puritan concern and took the note over for collection because he could collect it while the Puritan Company could not. That is a good defense if it can be established, and Mr. Baldy can then go ahead and make the same answer as to why he should not pay the note, that he could have made without restriction if the Puritan Company had sued him.

Legal Weight of a Bushel of Potatoes.

Skinners Eddy, Pa.,
September 9, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Will you please advise me if the Pennsylvania Legislature did not pass a law requiring produce dealers and all persons handling or putting up potatoes to put them up in 3-bushel barrels of 180 pounds; that is, 60 pounds to the bushel? Also, when did the law go into effect?

Yours respectfully,
E. P. Henwood,
Secretary Merchants' Union Protective Association of Bradford and Wyoming Counties.

The Pennsylvania Legislature of 1913 passed a law establishing 60 pounds as the legal weight of a bushel of potatoes, but there is no law requiring potatoes to be packed in a barrel holding three bushels.

Lowney Company Not Absorbed by United Drug Co.

Boston, Mass., Sept. 8, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—In a recent issue of your publication there appeared on page 13 an item headed, "Lowney Chocolate Co. Sold." Not only are the statements in this article entirely incorrect, but they art of a nature to be of possible injury to this company. On this account we ask you to correct them in the earliest issue available.

Neither the United Drug Co. nor any other company has acquired an interest in the Walter M. Lowne Co., which will continue to ope ate its Boston plant and will hav the exclusive sale of all Lowne products as formerly.

"Chocolate Refiners, Inc.," is Massachusetts corporation whic has taken over the Mansfield plar of The Walter M. Lowney Co where "all products of the coco bean" will be manufactured for th Walter M. Lowney Co. and th United Drug Co., which companie own all the capital stock of the ne corporation.

Yours very truly,
The Walter M. Lowney Co.,

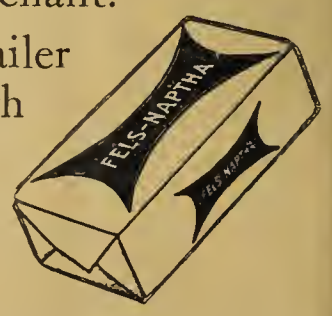
Tomato Pack Looks Big But Not Yet Sure.



All prospects are favorable for an e cellent crop of late tomatoes. Con tions now are most favorable and wi the continuance of warm, dry weath and a late frost, we look for a ve fine crop and a large pack, despite t labor conditions. From rather incor plete returns the average acreage und contract by canners throughout t United States is 34 per cent. great than last year. New Jersey is 25 p cent., Maryland 27 per cent and Del ware 50 per cent. more than a year ag Indiana shows an increase of 58 p cent. in her acreage and Kentucky h almost doubled hers. Even New Yo shows an 18 per cent. increase, and Oh 47½ per cent. And in considering th let it be borne in mind that a very lar acreage was planted last year despite t wretched crop. Of course, a protract period of cold, damp, sour weather cold rains and high winds would sta an epidemic of septoria or late blig that would effectually shatter the pre ent roseate prospects of the crop.

No. 381.—An Important Decision Affecting the Lending of Money on Accounts Receivable.

As I have stated before, there are concerns springing up all over the country which make a practice of providing ready money for business men by advancing them money on their accounts receivable. I have described the scheme in a previous article. Not only are concerns coming into existence for the express purpose of doing that and nothing else, but trust companies, already established and doing a regular trust company business, are taking on the purchase of accounts as a side line.

The National Credit Men's Association considers the whole scheme an evil, because it is apt to deceive a credit man who includes in his estimate of a customer's worth the usual item of "book accounts," which often run high. If the book accounts have already been borrowed on, the customer's real worth may be considerably less than it was thought to be. The association will ask for legislation compelling a business man who borrows on his book accounts to disclose the fact to his creditors.

The Illinois Supreme Court has just handed down a decision in a very important case involving the practice of borrowing on accounts receivable, after the manner described above. The law laid down there, which would probably be adopted by almost any court in the country, may change the entire method now used for loaning money on accounts receivable. In the case referred to (Mercantile Trust Company vs. Kastor, 112 N. E. 988, Illinois Supreme Court) the court said that the whole scheme, as practiced, was illegal, because the trust company was getting usury from the concerns who borrowed on their accounts receivable. I have reason to believe that the form of agreement which the Mercantile Trust Co. used, and which was passed upon by the Illinois Court, is substantially used by every concern that lends on accounts receivable. If that is true, it follows that they are all practicing usury.

In the Illinois case the trust company advanced 77 per cent. upon all accounts which it accepted. If the account was paid to it within 15 days a charge of 1 per cent. was made, if paid in 30 days it charged 2 per cent. and 1 per cent. additional for each 30 days thereafter that the account remained unpaid. The merchant was to pay all legal fees and collection expenses. The agreement was drawn with the intention of making a sale of the accounts. The case before the courts was to determine whether it was actually a sale or a pledge. If the accounts were sold the fee was proper, but if the accounts were merely pledged as collateral, the fee, considered as interest, was usurious.

The following is from the court's decision, in which it held that it made no difference that the trust company had tried to make the transaction appear to be a sale of Kastor's accounts; the fact was that it was merely a loan:—

> In our judgment the contract between the Trust Company and Kastor is not an agreement for the sale of accounts, but is an agreement for the loan by the trust company to Kastor upon the pledge of the latter's accounts of 77 per cent. of the face of the accounts at a rate of interest equal to 1 per cent. additional for each additional thirty days from the date of the advancement of the money until its repayment. The agreement fixes no price at which the whole interest in the accounts was to be purchased, but contains a scale of percentages for ascertining the proportion to be retained by the trust company and the proportion to be paid to Kastor out of the accounts when collected.
> While it says that the trust company is to pay a percentage of the face value of the accounts on a descending scale from 99 per cent., according to the time when they shall be paid, the instrument goes on at once to provide that the trust company shall never be required to pay to exceed 77 per cent. of the face value. If anything additional was to be received by Kastor it was to come from the collection of the accounts themselves and not from the trust company.
> The trust company was in no event to advance more than 77 per cent. of the face of the accounts, and in no event was it to receive less than the amount advanced, with interest at the rate of 1 per cent. of the face of the accounts for the first fifteen days, 1 per cent. for the second fifteen days and 1 per cent. for each thirty days after the first thirty days.
> While the parties to the contract have carefully used language appropriate to a sale, the instrument, when complete, evidences not a sale, but a pledge for the security of a loan.
> The contract sufficiently shows that the transaction was intended to be a mere pledge of the accounts for a loan of money at a usurious rate of interest. The instrument bears on its face conclusive evidence that it is merely a device to receive more than the law allows for the use of money loaned. The form of the transaction is not material. No device intended to disguise the real character of the transaction can avail to defeat the statute. Calling the transaction a sale of accounts does not alter the fact that the transaction is merely an advancement of money, to be repaid by the borrower with a rate of interest greater than that allowed by law.

Following this, the court of course cut down the Trust company's charges for making the loan. The importance of the decision is not that it prohibits in any way the lending of money on book accounts; it could hardly do that, but it puts a decided crimp in the business by depriving it of most of its profit. I have reason to believe that a constantly increasing number of business people now use this method of raising ready money, so that the matter is one to be taken into account. The only way to get around the decision is to actually buy the accounts, which for various reasons the lending companies do not want to do.

I have made some study of the Trade Acceptances which are a part of the Federal Reserve Act, and believe that in a very short time they will entirely displace the scheme o borrowing money on accounts r ceivable. A Federal Trade Accep ance is little more than I O U. is a written acknowledgment by t buyer, of money owing for goo sold and delivered. A, a wholesal or a manufacturer, sells $300 wor of goods to B, a retailer, to be pa for on regular terms. If A is a customed to borrow on his accou receivable, he will take his against B, with other similar counts, to a lending company a borrow a certain percentage of face value. If he uses the Fede Trade Acceptance plan, he merely ask B to sign a paper knowledging owing A so mu money and agreeing to pay it a certain date. A takes this to bank and discounts it as if it w a note, and thus gets his re money without the enormous in est rates that all of the priv companies charge. The bank discounts trade acceptances can discount them with a Federal serve Bank, and thus there is steady flow of ready money all time.

Being a Church Member and a Business Man.

I wonder after all whether being a church member and all that sort of thing makes a fellow any better business man. I mean any squarer business man.

I used to have a grandmother—God rest her soul!—that thought so. She didn't think she could trust a fellow at all unless he had religion, and she used to buy her stuff of one of the worst old run-down rips in the town, just because he belonged to her church and had a class in Sunday School. The trouble that dear old soul went to just to help along one of the flock was the limit. There wasn't many like her, and there ain't many like her to-day. I ain't sure there ought to be. People nowadays believe that being a church member don't make a fellow any better business man than the one that ain't a church member, or any squarer, and they give their trade to the one they think's the best. And after all, ain't that right?

I know a chap that's got a good store not far from York, Pa. I used to sell him some goods, but him and I couldn't hit it and I dropped out. He's a church member, very muchly much of a one. He's in church up to his neck—a deacon or something in the church, and a teacher in the Sunday School, and a secretary in some other society they have. On Sundays they tell me he takes his cheese sandwich, goes there at nine o'clock and stays all day.

Between you and me—I don't want this to go any further—I wouldn't trust him with a tin nickel. He's as sharp as a razor and he cuts both ways. It always seemed to me as if his idea of religion was this: that if he did all these stunts on Sunday he could do what he darn pleased on week days, and it wouldn't be laid up against him. Sort of insurance policy, if you know what I mean.

I've known that fellow to lie and to steal. He lied to me once, and he knew he lied, about a competitor of his, so I wouldn't sell the competitor a certain thing that he wanted me to sell to him and nobody else. I ran that lie out that very day and found out that there wasn't a blame thing in it. I found out too that the man that told it was in position where you can bet he knew that. And when I found all that out I went back to the church member—that was the time we broke—and I said a few well chosen words to him that I'll bet he remembers, unless he's got a hide like a rhinocerous. This is what I said:—

"You told a mean lie to me this morning, Battersby, about ———, and you did it because you thought you could make something for yourself by it. You—a church member that sings psalms through your nose every Sunday. You're a first-class pole cat and I'll never come in your place again as long as I'm on the road!"

He wrote to my house and tried to lie about me too, but I soon fixed that. And if it wasn't that I swore when I was married that I'd never kill another person, I would have gone in his store again—once more, to smash his skull.

I said I'd known the same man to steal, too, and I have. He used to make claims on us that hadn't anything in 'em at all. I proved 'em to be phony twice, and he practically owned up to it once.

A liar, a thief and a church member. I'll bet the Almighty is laying for him all right and when his time comes to walk up and take his medicine, instead of a gold cornet he'll get a swift kick.

Now I know a lot of other church members and they ain't all that way. —gee whiz, no! But if you ask me, I can't say as their being church members makes 'em any squarer, or any better business men. I ain't running down church members, don't get that in your head for a minute. I'm just saying that in business, my experience is that a fellow is honest if the Lord made him that way, whether he's a church member or whether he ain't, and he's dishonest, if the Lord made him that way, whether he's a church member or whether he ain't.

Why one of the squarest chaps I do business with don't believe in religion, don't believe in church, don't believe in anything like that. As a cusser he's the daddy of 'em all. He's a chap a lot of you wouldn't let come inside your house if you heard him talk first. And yet I'd take his word for anything. He's as near absolutely square as a chap can be. He wouldn't take a hair line advantage of you to make a million dollars.

I often wonder how the Almighty'll look on two chaps like that, when they stand up there some day, to get what's coming to 'em. I suppose both of 'em'll be told to go to, and yet the cusser who's square certainly ought to have better luck than the church member that's crooked. Don't you think so? At least he's no blamed hypocrite.

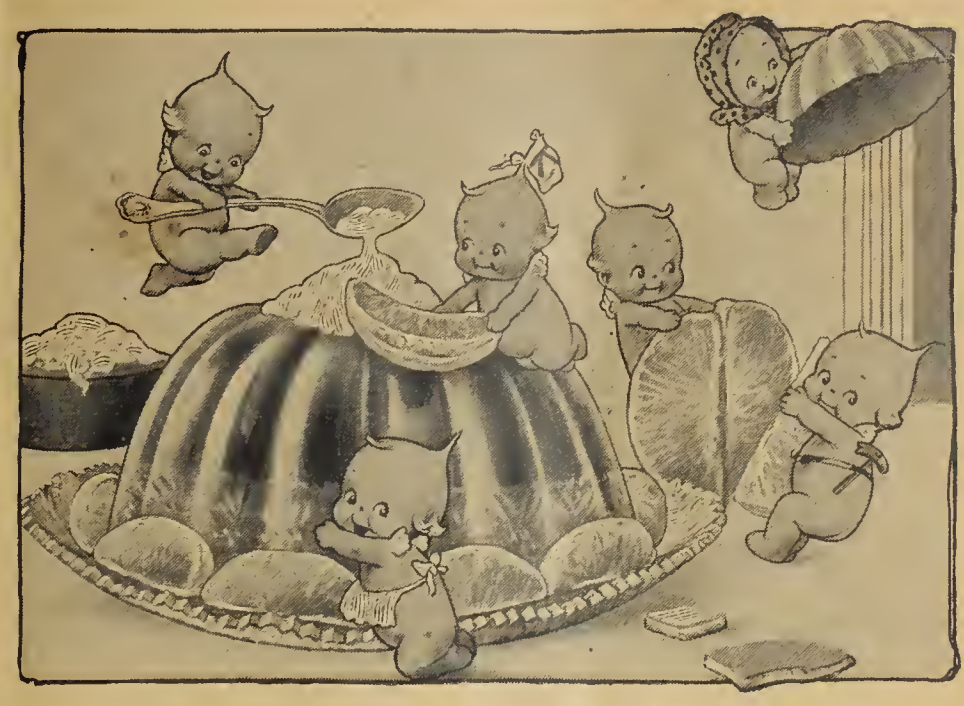
The above suggested the subject of Excuses—and a good clerk ought to feel too proud to make excuses. If you could only realize how feeble you appear before your superior when you offer silly excuses for not carrying out out instructions you would surely hesitate many a time before offering them.



True, there are many exceptions, but there are far too many that are not exceptions. Don't give a thing up because of some weak obstacle. Kick it over head first and go about that business.

Are You a Country Grocer?—We mean by that a cross-roads, six steps to the door, open-lot grocer. Hay and grain "department" in the rear and kerosene "department" on the right as you enter. Then put in Nabiscos and stuffed olives and cakes that go with ice cream. Do it if you want to be talked about. All good advertising begins and ends in talking about you. Two and three miles around your neighborhood girls and the mothers of girls are constantly having parties, little blow outs, and tids bits served at these little affairs come from "town."

Not that these girls and their mothers don't want to patronize you, but because you don't want to patronize them. You don't step in line. You give the salesman the ha! ha! when he suggests a can of assorted cakes to sell at 18 cents a pound. You ask him if he thinks you're a Park & Tilford store when he shows up a can of sliced peaches that can be sold for 15 cents. You good, honest, hard-working country grocerymen limit yourselves. You simply banish your better class neighborhood trade by not carrying anything they want—on "occasions."

The Science of Retail Advertising

This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon reguest, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up in strict rotation.

Perhaps it will be an agreeable change for all of us if I depart for once from my usual habit of criticising advertising matter sent in, which I have pursued weekly for many years. Last week one of my friends was good enough to invite me to accompany him on a motor trip through New England. To reach New England we were obliged to pass through portions of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York State. In the entire trip we passed through forty-seven sizable towns and villages, outside of the cities. I told my friend in the beginning of a certain thing I wanted to do, and he very generously consented to endure the necessary delay. It was to get in all the towns where a local paper was published a copy of it so that I could size up the advertising of the local grocery stores. All told, thirty-three of the forty-seven towns published their own local papers, and I got a copy of every one, merely by driving by the office and buying the latest issue. At my leisure I looked them over, and thus was able to form an idea of the quality and character of the retail grocery advertising done in the regions through which I passed.

It has been a pet idea of mine that the quality of the advertising done by the small town grocer has been steadily improving for several years, but I confess I found this idea somewhat weakened after an examination of these thirty-three papers. The average was lamentably low. The grocery advertising in these thirty-three papers—or I should say in the thirty-two, for in one there was no grocery advertising at all, though it was a town of 1,800 people, with three or four stores anyway—could be divided into three classes:—

1—The stores that evidently advertised on a trade basis, or simply to help the paper along.

2—The stores that evidently tried to make their advertising effective and expected it to get results, but did not know how.

3—The stores that evidently tried to make their advertising effective and expected it to get results, and did know how.

Of course often I would meet all three classes in one paper, although usually there was a neighborhood average that was quite remarkable. If any of the grocery advertising was careless and sloppy, usually all of it was. Apparently there was nobody to stir up the dry bones. On the other hand where there was one good brisk advertiser there was almost certain to be more, because that one stirred up the whole trade to follow him. In the first class I put twenty papers. In the second class I put eleven and in the third class only one. Out of all the grocery advertising in those thirty-two papers there were only three advertisements that any experienced advertising man would in my judgment call good and two of those were in one paper.

It was a very interesting experience for me, and one that I have never been able to have before. I am sorry, however, that it turned out the way it did, for it appeared to show that the average town advertising is lower than I thought it was. How can it be raised? One way of doing it might be for the local merchants' associations in towns of a few thousand, or the county or State association if there is no local, to have weekly or monthly lessons given to members by a competent advertising man.

An Interesting Cut-Price Suit.

Suit for an injunction to restrain Philip G. Affleck, a druggist at Fourteenth and F streets, Northwest, Washington, D. C., from selling Ingersoll watches at a price less than is set by the manufacturer, has been instituted in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia by Robert H. Ingersoll & Brother, of New York. The manufacturers state that they undertake to assist the retail trade in selling their watches to the general public. To this end they apply their special name and trade-mark "Ingersoll" to the watches and place in each a written guarantee. They also furnish to the retail distributors certain so-called "selling helps," consisting of certain fixtures, display cases, stands, cases and other advertising devices, bearing permanently thereon their trade-mark and being adapted to advertise, display or contain their branded watches. In addition to these, they also assist in the retail selling of their watches by means of extensive general and special advertising. They contend that these "selling helps" were placed at the disposal of the druggist for use in the distribution of the branded watches and was permitted by the plaintiffs to display, mention and benefit by their name, trade-mark, guarantee, reputation, good will, "selling helps" and advertising, in the display, disposition and sale of their watches, and that the druggist availed himself of these privileges. The manufacturers represent that the low retail selling prices of these watches are dependent upon the gross bulk of their sales, and this in turn is dependent upon their standardized sales system, comprising the various things mentioned above. It is further represented that this standardized sales system is dependent upon and essentially includes a standard retail selling price and that the distribution of their branded watches generally among the retail trade of the country is in turn dependent upon the integrity of plaintiffs' advertising and standardi retail price, so that low prices for watches to the consuming public is rectly dependent upon large sales wh can be secured only through standa ized selling methods, and that the moralization of the system by any f ure of the retail distributors to work harmony therewith is calculated to does have the effect of increasing distribution costs and this tends to crease the retail prices of their bran watches. They allege that the drug has been selling the Yankee watche 69 cents each, and threatens to c tinue to offer and sell them in vi tion of a contract said to have been tered into by him, unless enjoined the court. They ask for an order straining him from continuing the of the watches at 69 cents or any p less than the price forming part of standardized sales system, unless removing the watch or watches f the case, container or package in wh they are contained, the plaintiffs' na trade-mark, trade name, guarantee all other printed, written or stam words indicating that the watch watches is or have been manufactu by them, or with the use of their called "selling helps" or adverti matter.

You'd Think It Was a Dun!

Have you ever been in a wholesale grocery house when you could watch the difference between the reception received by an unstamped specialty order and that received by a stamped specialty order?

You would think the unstamped order was a dun, by the treatment it got. But the stamped order is almost invariably taken care of and treated like real business. As indeed it is. We know of practically no jobber to-day who plays fast and loose with a specialty order that bears either of the above stamps. He is not so foolish, now that it is guaranteed.

All this holds a lesson for you, Friend Retailer. It is that when you sign a stamped specialty order, you will get your goods, and get them when you want them.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can possibly sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

"If I went into business again," said an old retired grocer the other day, "I should sell nothing but goods that had been advertised into a public acquaintance. I should sell them on small margins and turn them just as fast as I could. I believe I could cut down the expense of doing business five per cent. by doing it that way."

He could too—but it would take nationally advertised goods to do it.

MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD

VOL. LXII. PHILADELPHIA, September 25, 1916. NO. 13

Read the reports from retailers all over Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware as to fall business prospects. Almost all say business is good and is going to be better. If your experience differs, it may or may not be your fault.

The Most Unique Grocery Scheme Yet is an Insurance Idea by Which Sick Consumers Get Free the Same Quantity of Groceries That They Got When Well. Grocers Present the Policies in Connection With the Use of Dummy Money Which Avoids Bookkeeping.

A Contributor Says That the Peddler is Destroying the Retail Grocers by Selling His Most Unprofitable Items. He Thinks the Peddler is a Fraud. Some Editorial Discussion.

Full Text of the Court Decision Which Holds Pennsylvania Cold Storage Food Act to be Unconstitutional.

A Real Whole Wheat Toast

Lovers of real whole wheat toast will find palate satisfaction and real food value in the Shredded Whole Wheat Wafer. It is made the same as Shredded Wheat Biscuit except that it is compressed into a wafer and baked by electricity. Unlike many so-called whole wheat flour products, it has the whole wheat in it, including the bran-coat, which is so useful in stimulating bowel movement. You should always keep this crisp, snappy, delicious wafer in stock. It is delicious when eaten with butter, soft cheese or marmalades.

Made only by

The Shredded Wheat Co.

Niagara Falls, N. Y.

Don't Sell Unprofitable Wheat Cereals

Every grocer must sell at least one wheat cereal. Some wheat cereals actually cost him money to sell, instead of paying a profit.

Wheatena is the best wheat cereal made—the most carefully made—and has always paid the retailer a good profit. Merchandise which is at the same time good and profitable is the only kind to sell.

Full Text of Decision Holding Pennsylvania Cold Storage Food Act Unconstitutional

The Ground is That it Forbids the Sale of Food Products That May Be Absolutely Wholesome and Good. Judge Holds This to Be an Illegal Confiscation of Property.

We present below the full text of the decision in which Judge Carpenter, of the Allegheny County Court, recently declared the Pennsylvania cold storage food act of 1913 unconstitutional, in that it forbade the sale of food products after they had been held in storage for certain fixed periods, regardless of their condition. If the reasoning of the court is sound, as we believe it is, then it could be applied to the cold storage food act of any other State, for all of them prescribe arbitrary time limits for stored products. The decision is therefore considered sufficiently important to publish in full:—

1. Plaintiff is a wholesale dealer in butter, eggs and cheese, in the city of Pittsburgh, Pa.

2. On or about June 9, 1915, plaintiff placed certain tubs of butter in cold storage in warehouse No. 5 of the Union Storage in said city of Pittsburgh, part of which remain in said warehouse.

3. On or about March 14, 1916, Edward P. Jones and Jennie Jamison, two of the defendants, acting or claiming to act under the authority vested in them by the Cold Storage Act of 1913, and their appointment as agents of James Foust, Dairy and Food Commissioner of Pennsylvania, seized three tubs of butter belonging to plaintiff, and then in said cold storage warehouse, and placed thereon certain tags or pasters setting forth that said butter had been held in cold storage beyond the time allowed by law; that the same was not salable as food, etc.

4. On or about March 16, 1916, plaintiff demanded of said storage company the delivery of said tubs of butter, offering to pay all storage charges, but the said storage company, at the instance of or pursuant to an agreement or arrangement with the other defendants, or some of them, refused to deliver said butter except in presence, or upon the order of, the Dairy and Food Commissioner, or his agents.

5. Jennie Jamison, agent for and acting under the direction of her co-defendant, James Foust, has declared her purpose to institute criminal proceedings against plaintiff, under the provisions of the Cold Storage Act of 1913, if he offers said butter for sale for food.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW.

First: Equity has jurisdiction.

Second: Section 16 of the Act, approved May 16, 1913, known as the Cold Storage Act of 1913, is in conflict with the Constitution of Pennsylvania, in that it violates the provisons of Article I, Section 1, entitled "Declaration of Rights."

Third: Said section (16) is unconstitutional and void, being in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides, inter alia:—

"No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law; nor deny any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

Fourth: Plaintiff is entitled to the relief prayed for in the second and third paragraphs of his prayer.

DISCUSSION.

Counsel have expressed their desire that the court pass upon the controlling question, to wit, the constitutionality of the Act of Assembly known as the "Cold Storage Act" of 1913, and particularly Section 16 of said act. To the end that the question thus presented may be considered and decided, and for no other reason, the material facts alleged in the bill are admitted. The sum of money immediately involved is unimportant, but the value of the right asserted by plaintiff is by no means small, and the question involved is of first importance to the State, to dealers in food and products and to the persons or corporations maintaining cold storage warehouses.

The Cold Storage Act of 1913, P. L. 216, is entitled:—

"An Act, For the protection of the public health and the prevention of fraud and deception, by regulating the storage and sale of cold storage foods; fixing penalties for the violation of the provisions thereof, and providing for the enforcement thereof."

The first seven sections define certain terms and words used in the act. The next eight sections refer to various matters not involved—at least not directly, in this controversy. Section 16, relating to periods of storage, is attacked as unconstitutional. Some of the provisions of the remaining sections may be involved in the questions raised, but the controversy centers in Section 16, which is as follows:—

Section 16. No person, firm or corporation shall sell, offer or expose for sale, any of the herein named foods, which shall have been held for a longer period of time than herein specified in a cold storage warehouse or warehouses, to wit: Whole carcasses of beef, or any parts thereof, four months; whole carcasses of pork, or any part thereof, six months; whole carcasses of mutton, or any parts thereof, six months; whole carcasses of lamb, or any parts thereof, six months; whole carcasses of veal, or any parts thereof, three months; dressed fowl, drawn, five months; dressed fowl, undrawn, ten months; eggs, eight months; butter, nine months, and fish, nine months."

It is contended by counsel for plaintiff that this section is in violation of the rights guaranteed by the Constitution of Pennsylvania and is in total disregard of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Counsel for defendants contend that neither of these propositions is maintainable, and on the contrary, assert that the entire act is constitutional and a valid exercise of legislative power, as a police regulation.

The provisions of our Declaration of Rights are familiar to all and need not be quoted. It is sufficient to say that the right to acquire, possess and protect property and reputation and of pursuing happiness is guaranteed, and no person can be deprived of life, liberty or property unless by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land.

The Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States reads, in part, as follows:—

"No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law."

Does the 16th Section of the act under consideration offend against the fundamental law of the State and of the United States? Counsel have argued the question and have furnished exhaustive briefs. Having examined the authorities cited and carefully considered the arguments advanced, I have reached the conclusion that this section of the act plainly and palpably violates those provisions of our State Constitution and the Constitution of the United States to which reference has been made.

No one will question the right of the Legislature to enact laws for the protection of the public health, nor will any person question the constitutional power of the Legislature to enact laws prohibiting the sale of impure foods, or of any imitation of any food, as genuine. If my understanding of the numerous decisions cited by defendants' counsel is correct, they so decide, and do not go beyond that limit. To say that the manufacturer or dealer shall not add water to vinegar intended for sale, or that imitation butter shall not be sold as genuine, is clearly a legislative function. It may be that, after proper scientific investigation the Legislature can declare certain foods or articles used as food, deleterious to health and prohibit their sale; though everyone knows that opinions concerning what we shall eat and what we shall drink, in order to avoid sickness, differ widely. It will be noted that the "Cold Storage Act" does not assert that it is based on scientific experimentation or observation. In so far as any reason for its enactment is disclosed, the time limit for cold storage of the articles mentioned might have been cut down one-half, or doubled. If the act contained a provision to the effect that after the periods specified the several articles could not be removed from cold storage and sold without inspection, possibly no legal objection could be interposed.

Butter has been used as a food for centuries, and prior to the introduction of cold storage warehouses was preserved and kept sweet and wholesome for long periods of time by those who made and understood how to protect it against decay. With the wisdom or lack of wisdom exhibited in the enactment of any law, the courts have no concern, but it may not be improper to call attention to the fact that a place specially designed constructed and operated for the purpose of preserving butter against deterioration, is the only place where it cannot be kept beyond a specified number of months. Butter may be kept in the spring house for an indefinite time and sold to any person who is willing to buy it, but if it is placed in cold storage the owner becomes a criminal, liable to fine and imprisonment, if he attempts to sell it for food one day after it has been in storage nine months. The question of its condition, its fitness for food, is absolutely excluded from consideration.

If the provisions of the act concerning which complaint is made be allowed to stand, then I know of no valid reason why the Legislature may not pass an act requiring every farmer and dairyman to dispose of his butter within nine months or one month after it is made, making it a misdemeanor to offer it for sale for food at any later time. It is a matter of common observation that fruits and vegetables decay, and that the process of deterioration goes on more rapidly under certain conditions than it does under others, yet if the Legislature can, with or without reason, prohibit the sale of butter kept in cold storage for nine months, it can make it a misdemeanor to sell or offer for sale fruits and vegetables that have been kept a week or a month after being gathered.

As above stated, no one doubts the right and duty of the Legislature to declare that water shall not be put in vinegar, lard in butter or sand in sugar, if intended for sale, but to confiscate a man's property merely because he may chance to keep it in cold storage for a single day beyond the number of months arbitrarily designated, is certainly depriving him of his property without due process of law. But it is said that to enforce the act is not confiscation, inasmuch as it does not absolutely prevent the withdrawal and sale of the butter, but merely declares that it shall not be sold for food. This contention is more plausible than sound. An act may be confiscatory though it does not wholly deprive one of the use of, and the right to sell, his property. I do not know the uses to which condemned butter can be put, but to label it "Not Salable for Food" makes it unmarketable, or if not, it certainly depreciates and practically destroys its market value. It is, however, earnestly contended that this legislation is a proper and valid exercise of the police power of the State. "Police power," like "charity," may doubtless cover a multitude of sins, but neither can justify the taking of one's property without compensation and contrary to the fundamental law of the State.

I am not unaware that the Supreme Court of the United States has in numerous cases upheld the power of the State to enact laws protecting the public health, morals, etc., but a careful examination of many of these cases makes it plain that what Mr. Justice Field, in Mugler vs. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, describes as "That undefined power of the State, called its Police Power," cannot be exercised without, and beyond the limits of reason. The Fourteenth Amendment forbids the arbitrary deprivation of ife and property and the arbitrary spoilation of property.

Barbier vs. Connolly, 113 U. U. 27.

The thought that seems to pervade all the decisions is well expressed in Patterson vs. Kentucky, 97 U. S. 501, in which, after citing decisions in reference to the powers of Congress to regulate commerce against encroachment under the guise of police regulations, the court says:—

"It has, nevertheless, with marked distinctness and uniformity, recognized the necessity, growing out of the fundamental conditions of civil society, of upholding State police regulations, which were enacted in good faith and had appropriate and direct connection with that protection to life, health and property which each State owes to her citizens."

It will be noted that good faith and direct connection with the protection of life and health must appear. Attention has already been called to the fact that no reason is given for saying that butter kept in cold storage eight months and twenty-nine days is fit for food, but if kept nine months and one day it may not be sold for food. Good faith may be assumed, but it must appear that the "regulation" has appropriate and direct connection with public health. That the preliminary duty of inspection rests upon the State is recognized in the 13th Section of the Cold Storage Act, but it will be noted that condemnation under the 16th Section is not made to depend on the result of the required investigation; in fact, inspection and examination have no relation to each other.

In Railroad Company vs. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, 469 the court, conceding the right of the State to enact reasonable inspection laws to prevent the portation of diseased cattle, held invalid a law prohibiting the introduction of Texas cattle, even though they were perfectly healthy. This case, it is true, related to interstate commerce, but the following from Schollenberger vs. Pennsylvania, discussing Railroad vs. Husen, bears upon the question now being discussed.

"Reasonable and appropriate laws for the inspection of articles, including food products, were admitted to be valid, but absolute prohibition of an unadulterated, healthy and pure article has never been permitted as a remedy against the importation of that which was adulterated and therefore unhealthy and impure."

"It does not at all follow that every statute enacted ostensibly for the promotion of these ends is to be accepted as a legitimate exertion of the police powers of the State. There are of necessity limits beyond which the Legislature cannot rightfully go. While every possible presumption is to be indulged in favor of the validity of a statute, Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700-718, the court must obey the Constitution rather than the law-making department of the government, and must depend upon their own responsibility determine whether in any particular case these limits have been passed. 'To what purpose,' it is said in Marbury vs. Madison, 1 Cranch 137-175, 'are powers limited, and to what purpose is that limitation committed to writing, if these limits may at any time be passed by the intended to be restrained?' The distinction between a government with limited and unlimited powers to abolish those limits do not confine the persons on whom they are imposed, and if acts prohibited and acts allowed are of equal obligation. Courts are not bound by mere forms, nor are they to be misled by mere pretenses; they are at liberty—indeed, are under a solemn duty—to look at the substance of things whenever they enter upon the inquiry whether the Legislature has transcended the limits of its authority. If, therefore, a statute purporting to have been enacted to protect the public health, the public morals or the public safety, has no real or substantial relation to those objects or is a palpable invasion of rights secured by the fundamental law, it is the duty of courts to so adjudge, and thereby give effect to the Constitution."

Just wherein the public health is protected or fraud and deception prevented by authorizing certain State officials to brand a recognized wholesome food product "Not Salable for Food" without any reference whatever to its actual quality and condition, but solely because it has been preserved in a cold storage house for nine months and one day, is not apparent. "Not Salable for Food" must be held to mean "not fit for food," otherwise we have the State interfering with the private affairs of its citizens, without even a pretense of reason for so doing, and arbitrarily depriving the owner of the lawful use of his property. And if the words "not salable" mean "not fit," deception is not prevented, but is in fact practiced, and that by the State. For by its officers and agents it avers as a fact that which may not be true. I have already called attention to the fact that Section 16 is drastic, in that it fixes arbitrarily a time limit without any reference to the condition and without any provision for inspection of the food to ascertain whether it is "wholesome" and therefore "fit for human food," as defined in Section 7 of the act. The tag or paster does not say the butter is not wholesome, but that it is not salable for food.

In Schollenberger vs. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1 (Com. vs. Paul, 170 Pa. 284), Mr. Justice Peckham says:—

"Is the rule (that regulation is as far as a State may go) altered in a case where inspection or anaysis of the article to be imported is somewhat difficult and burdensome? Can the pure and healthy food product be excluded on that account? No case has gone to that extent. . . . In the execution of its police powers, we admit the right of the State to enact such legislation as it may deem proper, even in regard to articles of interstate commerce, for the purpose of preventing fraud and deception in the sale of any commodity and to the extent that it may be fairly necessary to prevent the introduction or sale of any adulterated article within the limits of the State, but in carrying out this purpose the State cannot absolutely prohibit the introduction of an article of commerce like pure oleomargarine. It has ceased to be what counsel for the Commonwealth has called it—a newly discovered product."

The Court of Appeals of New York, in People vs. Biesecker, 169 N. Y. 53, declared the following propositions firmly established:—

(a) The Legislature cannot forbid or wholly prevent the sale of a wholesome article of food.

WITH THE EDITOR

Price-Fixing from the Consumer's Standpoint.

Speaking of fixed prices and the Stevens bill, which would give manufacturers of trademarked goods the right to fix wholesale and retail selling prices, one of the most persistent price-fixers in the United States is the Victor Talking Machine Co. This concern is a member of the American Fair Trade League, and it ties up its dealers with limited price contracts so tightly they can hardly move. Moreover, the Victor has the courage of its convictions and it brings suit instantly against any dealer who cuts below regular prices.

The result is that no article of merchandise is more stable and fixed to-day than Victor talking machines and Victor records. Which is all right for the company and all right for the dealer, but let me discuss it a minute from the standpoint of the consumer. Read the following, which appeared in the financial columns of the Philadelphia "Ledger" last Monday:—

> Victor Talking Machine.—Regular quarterly of 5 per cent. and extra of 25 per cent. declared upon common, making 80 per cent. for the year to date, as compared with 50 per cent. for last year.

Of course, no matter how the retail prices were cut, the Victor Co. would get its price from its wholesale customers, so there is nothing in limited retail prices to directly increase the profits of the company. But consumers put the two together. They see concerns which advocate fixed selling prices almost invariably rolling up huge profits—declaring 80 per cent. dividends in nine months. And they are apt to reason thus: "The manufacturer and the dealer have entered into a conspiracy to hold prices up. The dealer profits by it because he has no price competition to meet, and the manufacturer profits by it because having helped the dealer to get his money, the dealer will help him get his. But where do I, the consumer, come in?"

That is why I believe the general public to be almost solidly against the Stevens bill, and why I feel sure that neither that bill nor anything like it will ever pass Congress.

Unanswerable Reasoning.

Anybody who can read Judge Carpenter's reasoning in his decision holding the Pennsylvania cold storage food act unconstitutional, and not agree with it, has a pretty narrow mind, it seems to me. The decision, in a nutshell, is that no law can forbid the sale of food products which admittedly may be thoroughly fit to sell. The Legislature can go pretty far, in the protection of the public health, but it cannot go that far. This has always been my own opinion and always will be, no matter what the Appeal Court does to this case. For even now, I have no great confidence that the higher court will agree with the lower. Where the courts are given to understand that the public health is involved, they will work very strenuously to save a law, and often they will protect the shadow rather than the substance.

Fighting Peddlers.

In another column appears an important article from a thoughtful contributor who says that the peddler is stealing all the grocer's profitable trade and leaving only the unprofitable behind. He cites tea, coffee, butter, extracts, spices, and so on, and asks that this paper make the retailer realize that the ground is being mined from beneath his feet. The contributor furthermore says that the average peddler always swindles his customers, and that it is comparatively easy to show this.

I am not willing to believe that the situation is quite as bad as the contributor paints it. Certainly the business prospect reports from Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, don't quite bear him out. There is no doubt, of course, that a great mass of merchandise which the grocer ought to sell is sold by peddlers, route men and vario itinerants. For this there are t reasons: First, it is more conve ent for the consumer to buy at t door; and second, the consun thinks she is buying cheaper. T first is of course true. It is mu more convenient to buy at the do than to go to a store, or worse, telephone and possibly have goo sent which she would not ha picked out. But the second, a cording to my observation, is nev true. The peddler never se cheaper than the average good gr cer, quality considered. On coffe and teas the peddler is extortiona in his prices. But is it as easy the contributor says it is, to get th before the consumer? I think no It would hardly be possible for th individual retailer to do it effec ively, although it might be practi cal for an association. The thin would involve some detective wor chemical analyses—expert compar sons of merchandise. If such thing was done, it ought to be don right. The results in detail shou be published in the local paper Done that way, it would make a impression, though even then son consumers would look on it a a petty piece of competitive spite work.

An active association, if it wer at the thing properly, could driv out every peddler who did not giv his customers fair value.

OBITUARY

THOMAS MARTINDALE.

Thomas Martindale, possibly the best known individual grocer in Philadelphia, and one of the best known in the United States, is dead, aged 71 years. He died in the wilds of Alaska several days ago, whence he had gone on one of his yearly hunting expeditions. Mr. Martindale's friends thought he ought not to go this year, for he was not in the best condition. The past year had told on him in every way. But he had himself examined by a Philadelphia physician, who told him to go; it would do him good. He went about a month ago, and got far into the inland without difficulty. He was there attacked with boils and carbuncles and a facial disorder which his friends believe to have been paralysis. The story of his last illness has not yet been fully told, for the body is yet on its way home. It is expected to reach Philadelphia on Saturday, September 23d. If it does, the funeral will occur on the Monday following.

Thomas Martindale was a very well known man. He was known perhaps best as a public man; he was also the author of several books on outdoor life. He was born in England of poor parents in 1845 and made himself what he was by sheer force of energy and personality. After following several occupations, he entered the grocery business in Oil City, Pa., in 1868, when he was 23 years old. He bought a half interest in a little store out there, but in a few years it was the leading store in the city, and Martindale owned it all. After a while he sold out and came to Philadelphia, where he located at Tenth and Market streets. His business is still there but is occupying several times as much space as it did in the beginning. It is one of the leading central stores of Philadelphia.

Mr. Martindale was always the leading spirit in his business, although for years he has had a fine organization around him. He even painted the quaint window signs which marked the store, and his personal imprint was more or less everywhere.

He was invariably a helpful friend. Hundreds of people went to him constantly for help, and he gave it freely—loaned them money, advised them out of his rich store of practical experience, used his influence to get them what they wanted, and so on without limit.

In the public life of the city M Martindale leaves a void. He wa first president of the Poor Richar Club, the founder of the Trade League, and member of many othe organizations, including the Reta Grocers' Association. He lecture frequently on his hunting trips i Maine and the Northwest, alway interesting and to full houses Many of the public movements o the last thirty years which hav culminated into successes ha Thomas Martindale as a promoter and the history of Philadelphia fo the past generation really canno be written correctly without includ ing his name at many points.

Perhaps his time had come—h was past the three score years an ten. But there will be hundreds o people in Philadelphia who will b directly poorer because of hi going.

Three Hundred Retail Meat Dealers Summoned for Weighing in Ham and Bacon Wrappings. Retailers in Short-Weight Bread Also to Be Prosecuted. California Walnuts Very High, Though Crop is Good. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, September 22, 1916.

The Commissioner of the local Bureau of Weights and Measures, Mr. Hartigan, made a sensational move during the week to stop the sale of ham and bacon wrappings in with the meat itself. He has summoned 300 retail meat dealers to appear before him in the Municipal Building to explain why they should not be prosecuted for what he claims amounts to the giving of short weight. All of the men summoned have been following the practice of weighing in the wrappings and charging for the whole at the pound meat rate. Mr. Hartigan gives out a statement during the week that this practice has netted meat men $1,000,000 a year.

Commissioner Hartigan has also stated that he will at once begin the prosecution of several hundred retail dealers in bread who sold loaves weighing less than twelve ounces. He says that he will proceed against 724 retail dealers on this account. The charge in all cases is that the dealer sold a loaf of bread for 5 cents which did not weigh what the label said it weighed. There was a shortage varying from three-fourths of an ounce to one and a half ounces. All of the better known brands of bread, including Ward's, Schultz's, Hildebrand's, Probst's, Eglar's, the General Baking Co., Droster Baking Co. and the O. K. Baking Co. are involved. The Commissioner has ordered criminal prosecution to be begun against every dealer who sells loaves weighing less than the net weight given on the label. The Commissioner will also ask the Board of Aldermen to pass an ordinance requiring bread to be sold in New York City by the pound or fraction of a pound.

In a recent issue of this correspondence was published a statement by the secretary of the National trade Association, apropos of the pending bill to allow manufacturers to fix the retail and wholesale selling prices, that when a manufacturer packed a product under his own advertised brand he charged a higher price for it than when he packed the same thing under somebody's private brand. E. A. Whittier, secretary of the American Fair Trade League, realizing the importance of this statement, has given out an answer during the week. The answer, however, is not very convincing. The secretary of the National Trade Association referred to a number of specific advertised brands in support of his statement. Mr. Whittier merely says "we know of no such articles."

The National Retail Dry Goods Association, in convention here during the week, discussed the question of returned goods, this having become an evil which has attracted the attention of the trade all over the country. Most of the discussion on the subject admitted that the fault lay with the stores themselves.

The California Walnut Growers' Association announced during the week the opening prices on California walnuts for the coming season. Fall Business Prospects in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" Addresses a Letter to a Representative Grocer or General Storekeeper in Every County of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, Asking the Condition of Business, Whether the People are Employed and Have Money, Whether Chain Store Competition Affects Them, and Condition of Collections. Some More of the Answers Received.

In an effort to learn what the immediate future holds for retail grocers and general storekeepers during the coming fall and winter, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has addressed a letter to a representative retailer in every county in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware. The letter asked the dealers addressed to answer the following questions:—

1. Is there plenty of money in your territory?

2. Are the people employed?

3. Are your collections good?

4. Are you suffering from chain store competition?

5. On the whole, do you expect your business to be as good, or better, or not as good, as last Fall's business?

Answers to these questions are beginning to come in and will be published as fast as received.

SOMERSET COUNTY, N. J.

I don't see anything alarming either way. Our business holds quite steady the whole season round. Every man that wants work is getting it, at good wages, too. The chain store is pulling a lot of business away from every credit store. No matter how hard you may try to fight them, a certain amount of good cash business is going to them as well as most of the cheaper class, and you can bet a piece of small change that the man who thinks he is not losing some business to the chain store needs to tighten up the strings on his business and take a look both ways.

I have opened a one-man store in another street in this town and expect to follow with more of them soon as I can get around to it. I feel sure that the people are being educated to the idea of paying cash and carrying home the bacon (Jack Johnson).

I am not figuring very much on big things in business the coming season. In the first place Presidential year is never a boomer; secondly, the air bubbles being manufactured in the shops of the United States will be pierced before the end of 1917, and it will make some crash.

Collections are not good enough for the amount of money the laborer is getting. They are very apt to increase expenses more than the increase in wages. I am going right after our accounts from now on. "Pay up" will be the battle cry.

W. H. Hooey,
Somerville, N. J.

MONROE COUNTY, PA.

Answering yours of the 12th inst., we beg to submit the following answers to your questions, which is only our own opinion, but unbiased, and think it answer conditions here in general:—

1.—Yes, there seems to be, all the banks show good increase in deposits over their statements a year ago.

2.—Yes, no reason for a single laborer or mechanic to have been idle a day this season, unless on account of weather or delay in getting material.

3.—A little better than a year ago, but still room for improvement.

4.—Yes, we have two here. We should have the cash trade that goes to them, as our business is mostly credit and the cash trade is what we need to swell our daily deposits and meet our bills more promptly.

On the whole, we think busines is better than a year ago; in fact we know it is, and think the fal and winter trade will be better tha last year. Weather has a grea deal to do in controlling busines conditions here. If we have an earl winter with good, cold weather i gives us a chance to move ou goods in season at prices we shoul get for them. Otherwise stock re mains on our shelves till past th season, then has to go on the bar gain counter at a loss. Give us good early, cold winter and busines will come our way.

A. W. Loder & Sons,
East Stroudsburg, Pa.

PIKE COUNTY, PA.

Good business to the groce means a fair profit; the high mar ket price in most everything he han dles is against him.

1.—Yes.
2.—Yes.
3.—Fairly.
4.—Yes.
5.—About the same.

In answering the above questions I am puzzled, I cannot see you object in asking them. Surely they answer themselves; the answers are too plain. You certainly know it is not a question if there is plenty of money in a territory or not, but rather how and where the money is spent that is there.

Yes, we small retailers suffe from chain stores, mail orde houses, parcel post, tea and coffe companies, outside peddlers and wholesale houses selling retail, mos of them without a retail license Ask the Milford postmaster who issues the money orders and the First National Bank who pays the checks for goods bought from thes oncerns. Business that should be one by the retail stores here.

As to future business, watch the arket. When prices are reasonble the small retailer makes money. When prices are too high, as they re now on flour, sugar, coffee, nned goods, groceries, meats, potoes, eggs, butter, cheese and the emainder of the list of goods a grocer and butcher carries, what hope is there for a fair profit, the only thing a man is in business for?

I expect to do as much or more gross business as last year, but to get a fair profit when prices are almost prohibitive, that is the question I will not attempt to answer.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

he tea market is unchanged for the k. Business is still very quiet, alugh there is something doing every . Ceylons appear to be in fairly d demand. No change in price has urred during the week.

Coffee.

he market for Rio and Santos coffee slumped a little during the week. demand, which has been very good, oorer, and in consequence prices are vy. One reason for this is the weak les from Brazil. It is conservative quote the market for practically all des of Rio and Santos from an ⅛ a ¼ cent off, although all holders not sell at this decline. Mild cofs are all quiet and easy. Java and cha unchanged.

Sugar.

he sugar market has shown a steady ancing tendency during the week and raws and refined have advanced a stantial fraction. Raws are about ¼ t higher and refined is about 25 to points higher. The early advent of ifornia beet sugar is not able to stop advancing tendency. The advance ntirely due to the scarcity and high ces of raws. The consumptive dend for refined sugar is fair. Furr advances are practically certain.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is somewhat weaker for the ek, showing a decline of 10 points. mpound syrup is still not wanted and l not come into the demand until the ather is cooler. Sugar syrup and moses are all unchanged.

Fish.

There is no change in shore mackerel the week. This year's catch is of y fine quality and the receipts to date e shown up very well. There is no nge to report either in the Irish or rway mackerel situation. It now ks as if there might not be any Nory fish sold in this country during the ning season, as Norway has placed embargo on the importation of salt ckerel and it is not likely that it will lifted. Mackerel is in good demand, n at the high prices. Cod continues y high in price, and this has resulted an active demand for hake, which is nearst good substitute for codfish. ke and haddock are both above nor-l, in sympathy with cod. Domestic dines are firm on account of scarcity, an advance of 5 cents per case. Imted sardines in exactly the same situation they have been in for several months. Salmon of all grades is still very strong on account of scarcity and active demand. Lower grades have advanced from 2½ to 5 cents per dozen.

Canned Goods.

There has been quite considerable activity in the tomato market during the past week. Prices on both 2s and 3s have advanced fully 5 cents per dozen. The market is now strong at 75 and 95 cents, f. o. b. factory in a large way. This advance is not so much owing to a possibly short pack as an active buying demand all over the country. Peas are still very strong, but with no particular advance during the week. Corn has made still further advances and is now selling freely at 25 cents per dozen over the opening price. California canned fruits are closely cleaned up in first hands, and slight advances have been made on spot. The general line of September goods is very much cut up, practically no packer has a full assortment. It looks like a general scarcity of canned goods for the balance of the year.

Dried Fruits.

The dried fruit situation remains unchanged. There is still not very much consumptive demand, as the season has not yet started. Raisins, currants, peaches and apricots are all unchanged from last week and for the most part are all firm.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans and lima beans are selling more freely at unchanged prices. Green and Scotch peas are dull at unchanged prices.

Butter.

The butter market is very firm at unchanged prices. The demand is good and receipts moderate. Export purchases still tending to strengthen the market. Higher prices are looked for during the coming week.

Eggs.

The market on fresh eggs is very firm, with a large consumptive demand. Fresh receipts are showing improvement in quality, due to cooler weather in producing sections. Storage eggs are very firm and withdrawals are heavy for this season of the year. The market continues firm and does not look like lower prices for the coming week.

Cheese.

The cheese market is steady at unchanged prices. Advices from the country markets show a weakening tendency. Exporters have discontinued buying, due to high prices. The September make is fair and if there is any change there will be a decline of ½ to 1 cent per pound in the near future.

Provisions.

The market on smoked meats is very firm, with prices about the same as last week. The hog market is very high and provisions are scarce. There is a good demand. Pure lard is firm, at an advance of ¼ to ½ cent per pound, due to the short killing of hogs. Prices will likely remain high until the end of October. Demand is good. Compound lard is very firm, showing an advance of ¼ to ½ cent per pound, due to a heavy consumptive demand. This, in turn, is due to the extreme high prices of pure hog lard. Canned meats are firm and unchanged, with a good consumptive demand. Barreled pork is firm at unchanged prices. Receipts are light, with a fair consumptive demand. The market on dried beef is very firm, with an advance of 2 to 3 cents per pound. There is a big scarcity in dried beef and not much relief is looked for before the middle of next week.

Cream of Wheat Co. Collects $200 From Grocers Who Sold in Bulk.

Under a consent decision rendered in the Federal Court at Los Angeles, Cal., five retail grocers of that city sued several months ago by the Cream of Wheat Co. for mis-use of the name "Cream of Wheat," have agreed to a permanent injunction restraining them from further use of the brand name and each of them has paid the Cream of Wheat Co. $200 damages, together with his percentage of the court costs of the suit. As there was no trial the latter item, being divided among five, was not so large, so the total expense to each defendant was only slightly over $200. Following are the Los Angeles grocers who settled on the above basis: Royston's Inc. (W. B. Kemper), 452 S. Main street; Ernest Gerlemann, 721 S. Main street; Marcus J. Firsich, 3111 S. Vermont avenue; J. E. McDavid, 2634 W. Pico street; Walter B. McConkey, Redlands, Cal. The case against H. G. Chaffee Pasadena chain store operator, the only defendant who filed an answer, has not yet come up, and it probably will be several months before trial date can be secured in the Federal Court. All of the cases grew out of the fact that these dealers purchased middlings from local mills and sold them in bulk or package form under the name of Cream of Wheat, Creamed Wheat or some similar designation, which the Cream of Wheat Co. maintained was an effort to trade illegally on their brand.

This Contributor Says the Peddler is Doing More Harm to the Retail Grocer Than Anything Else

Gives List of What Peddlers are Selling To-day. All the Profitable Items of a Grocer's Stock. Impose on Consumers All the Time. Many Grocers Suffering Because They Do Not Know How to Help Themselves.

There is a work of vital importance to the retail grocery trade, both in the small towns and rural districts, which a paper of your kind can do, and that is to awake the grocery and general store trade to the menace of peddlers.

In many portions of Pennsylvania, Delaware and Maryland, we find that the peddler supply houses have drawn from the retail grocers and general storekeepers a large part of their most profitable articles, with the result that in many places they are being left to handle simply the staples in which the profit is distressingly small or nothing at all.

These peddlers sell chocolate, teas, spices, tapioca, salad dressing, flavoring extracts and medicines. They have selected all of the most profitable items which the grocer handles and are simply sapping the life blood of the trade in the small towns and rural districts, as well as in some of the larger cities.

These peddlers do not help any community in which they operate. They are simply parasites and are of the same general order, or worse, as the mail-order houses. They not only absorb the merchant's profit, but take the money out of the town or country, and it never comes back. It goes to the big centers and stays there.

I find that in many communities the farmers bring in their eggs and other products in some localities to sell to the grocer. In some places they simply exchange them for merchandise. This is a very good plan as it keeps the money at home. In other places, however, where the merchants are not so aggressive, the farmer seems to be the better merchant of the two. His products may amount to $5, $10 or $20 a week, but he only exchanges about 10 per cent. of it for merchandise. We find, upon investigation, that 60 per cent. of the balance is sent to Chicago to the mail-order houses or to the peddlers from whom they purchase the many fake goods referred to in my former letter.

The merchant in the small town or country is a builder up of his community. He bears the taxes, spends his money among the people, keeps up the churches, lodges, charities and all of the activities of the community, and yet this man's usefulness and ability to do these things are being sadly crippled by the peddler. In some communities the merchant is simply being forced out of business.

Something ought to be done to bring this to the retailer's attention in such a forceful way that he will overcome this difficulty, but by himself he is almost powerless. He is not aggressive; he frequently does not take either your or any other trade paper; and, in talking to the retail men who work the retail trade for us and turn the orders over to the jobbers, they tell us they do not find any trade paper in the majority of the retail stores.

They have got to be brought to a realizing sense of the condition which confronts them, and they will have to be taught how to meet this competition. They can only do it by handling first class goods and giving service, by being alert, wide-awake and on the job. That is how the peddler gets his—by being on the job.

It is easy for the merchant to show the consumer she is being imposed upon by these peddlers; that she is paying tremendous prices for that class of stuff. If the merchant would analyze the consumer's orders given the peddler, he would find that besides extracts, spices, tapiocas, salad dressing, etc., they also contain considerable quantities of worthless cosmetics and medicines, which they buy at from $1 $1.25 per package. The cosmeti frequently could be purchased fro a first class store for one-third the price. Many of the medicin are not made from first class pr scriptions as are those which ha to bear the scrutiny of the publ and the censorship of the dru authorities.

Some of these peddlers even off the consumer this junk on s months' time, or to be paid f when they call again. It looks easy that a woman is inveigled in buying stuff for which she has use, and more of it, by far, tha she ought to, feeling she will ce tainly be able to pay the bill wh it comes due, and that she will ha used the goods before it is time pay for them. The bill becom due, she has much of this worthle stuff still on her pantry shelf, a yet she has to pay for them.

Would be pleased to have yo bring this matter to the attention the National Wholesale Grocer Association, the National Associ tion of Retail Grocers and other o ganizations which would be inte ested in the work of conserving t business of the retail grocer a general merchant.

FAIR PLAY.

See What Some of You Have Done to This Baker.

You grocers are a hard-hearted bunch. Just wait till I tell you.

A little baker in a town where I go every ten days had to go out of business last month on account of you fellows. Least, he says that's the main reason. You know when some fellows get into trouble, they always look for somebody else to blame it on. They never look inside themselves for it. Maybe he's that kind, I don't know him. I only know that he's telling everybody he was pushed out of business because everybody else stole his business away from him

When I heard that, I picked up my little pink ears, for there's the stuff, thinks I, for a sermon to the boys.

This is a town of about 4,000 people. This baker has had a store in it for about 12 years and before that his father had it. In fact his father laid away some money from that store and died pretty well fixed.

They had a big trade in bread and ice cream. They made 'em both themselves and sold 'em all over the town and outside.

In them days nobody but a baker sold bread. The grocer wouldn't any more have sold bread than he would have sold horse collars.

But to-day every one of the six grocers in that town sells bread. There's a chain store there and that gets fresh bread twice a day from its city plant. And all the other stores sell somebody's bread that comes up from the city too. You don't need to go to the little baker's for bread any more. In the first place, the little grocery store right around the corner sells it, and in the second place it's a darned sight better bread.

You simply can't turn out as good bread in a little country bakery with dust all over everything, as you can in these big city plants where they have everything everybody heard of to make bread with.

And it's a heap cheaper, too.

The little baker, when he went out, wrote a piece for the paper, saying that there didn't seem to be any room for his bread any more, and he had to drop out. It's pretty tough, when you think about it.

And his ice cream. There's a couple of drug stores up there that sell ice cream by the quart now. They don't make it—they get it from the city. It's Breyer's or Crane's or Horton's, or somebody's—just like the bread—and they do a big business in it. Charg less than the little baker charge too.

There's another bakery in tl town and that's got the agency f somebody's ice cream.

Well, you can see right aw why he couldn't stand the rack With the grocery stores taking h bread business, and the drug stor taking his ice cream business, the wasn't enough left to keep hi afloat.

But while the bread was bett the ice cream wasn't. On hot da I used to go in the little store a soak up a plate of the little bake ice cream, and it was all to the goo Tasted like the kind that moth used to make. Made out of crea The city ice cream that comes there ain't in it—tastes like glue me, but holy smokes, what people care about that, if they c get it for five cents a quart les

So the little store has gone out business, and the baker is runni around for 10-cent insurance po cies. Shame, ain't it?

Well, what am I going to about it? I ain't going to do an thing. If I was a grocer I'd s anything I could make money He's got to; other people are doi that to him. Before I'd be push out, I'd do anything to turn an ho est dollar, even to curing wa begosh!

The Pros and Cons of Price-Fixing.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I have noticed in your recent issue the announcement of the action of the Lebanon, Pa., Business Men's Association in opposition to the Stephens bill, and from the prominence which you have given it I know you realize the importance of this discussion and the interest that there should be in it for retail merchants and consumers.

I wonder if you have seen the recent statement issued by the National Trade Association which shows the increased cost at wholesale on merchandise when sold under a price-maintained system and the same merchandise when sold by the same manufacturers in bulk to retailers, who package it in packages equally as attractive but at a wholesale figure materially less than that charged when the manufacturer packages it and adds his price system? I trust that this will be of interest to you.

Very truly yours,
JOHN W. HAHN,

(b) Legislation intended and reasonably adapted to prevent an article being manufactured in imitation or semblance of a well-known article in common use, and thus imposing upon consumers or purchasers, is valid.

(c) In the interests of public health the Legislature may declare articles of food not complying with a specified standard unwholesome, and forbid their sale,

In holding, as I feel compelled to do, that Section 16 of the Cold Storage Act is unconstitutional, I am not mindful of what was said in Powell vs. Commonwealth, 114 Pa. 365, affirmed by the United States Supreme Court in Powell vs Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678:—

"The rights of the judiciary to declare a statute void and to arrest its execution is one which, in the opinion of all courts, is coupled with responsibilities so grave that it is never exercised except in very clear cases." On the other hand, I recognized the duty which Mr. Justice Harlan, in Mugler vs. Kansas, supra, rests upon the court. As to the jurisdiction of a Court of Equity, there does not appear to be any doubt.

"West's App., 64 Pa. 186. Ex Parte Young, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep 441."

In the latter case Mr. Justice Peckham says:—

"The various authorities we have referred to furnish ample justification for the assertion that individuals, who, as officers of the State are clothed with some duty in regard to the enforcement of the law of the State and who threaten and are about to commence proceedings either of a civil or criminal nature to enforce against the parties affected an unconstitutional act violating the Federal Constitution, may be enjoined by a Federal Court of Equity from such action."

West's appeal was a proceeding in equity against West as deputy eator. Mr. Justice Agnew, in rring to the act under which he proceeding, said:—

The act is contrary to law and lso prejudicial to the interests he society and its depositors. . We cannot view the proceed- of the auditor-general and his ity as that of a sovereign, ier to be resisted nor ar- ed; but by reason of its entire t of authority, we must de- e it to be illegal and void of reign sanction. Do You Lose Here Anywhere?

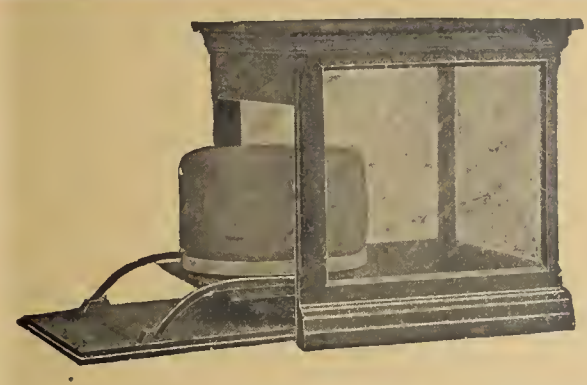
An investigation made by experts shows the following losses to be a fair yearly average for the ordinary grocery store:—

Mistakes on invoices	$12 00
Mistakes on customers' bills.	60 00
Failure to charge goods sold on credit	120 00
Waste of supplies	12 00
Mistakes in simple addition.	24 00
Time wasted in calming customers dissatisfied because of overcharge	12 00
A total of	$240 00



Not such an overwhelmingly large sum, yet it represents 6 per cent. net profit on $4,000 worth of business.

No. 382.—How Security in Business Transactions Sometimes Slips Away.

This article should interest any one of the following classes of business men:—

1—The one who asks somebody to become his surety on a business contract, which means to go security for him.

2—The one who asks a customer or some one with whom he is dealing to furnish security for the payment of a debt or the fulfillment of a contract.

3—The one who goes security for somebody else.

The following letter brings the question up:—

St. Louis, Mo.

Please answer this question: About six months ago we were applied to by a concern that wanted to open an account with us. They were large buyers, and their trade was somewhat sought after, but they are plungers, and the trade do not feel absolutely safe about them. We are a conservative house, and as they proposed to place a large initial order, we asked them to furnish security. This they did. A brother of one of the partners, a man of extensive estate, agreed to be their security, but did it through his lawyer, and the lawyer drew up a paper in writing agreeing to stand good for the firm up to a certain amount. There was a clause in the paper which bound us not to grant more than a certain amount of credit at a time, and not to sell one bill until the last one was paid in full. We let the house have their goods, and everything went along all right until last month, when the house failed. We thought we were protected by the security, but when we investigated we found that after the first two or three bills the house had always carried over a balance, and a considerable part of the amount they owe us is due to the accumulation of these balances. We called on the brother who went security to make good, but he refused on the plea that we didn't keep to our end of the contract. The case represents a substantial sum of money and we would appreciate your advice.

S. M. & Co.

If there is no more to this case than the correspondent sets forth, his money is gone.

It is a well-settled principle of law that where A becomes security for B, in a debt which B owes C, A is released from his security contract if C does anything which in any way releases or favors B, without A's consent.

As a leading case puts it: "Any material alteration in or deviation from the terms of the contract for whose performance the surety is bound will, if made without his consent, release him from his obligation."

Let me make that clearer. The point is that the surety or security agrees to become security on certain conditions. Sometimes those conditions are expressed, sometimes they are merely implied. If the conditions are changed in any material way, he has the right to say: "You have changed the situation. I did not agree to become security on these terms, and I decline to be." At the bottom of this is the assumption on the part of the law that the security has, under the conditions as arranged, a certain hold on the real debtor which will be weakened if the conditions are changed.

For instance, in a case which I remember, A executed a promissory note in settlement of a debt. His own credit wasn't very good, so he got a couple of friends to endorse for him. The note came due and wasn't paid. The holder of the note, without notice to the security, and without any effort to collect the note, accepted interest for another year in advance. Again the note came to maturity without payment and finally the maker laid down and the holder tried to collect from the two sureties. The court said no. The acceptance of interest in advance had the legal effect of extending the time of payment, and as the sureties had not consented to it they were released. The holder accordingly lost his money, merely by his generous act in giving his debtor more time. He should have asked the sureties before he did it.

In another case a contract provided that payments were to be made to a contractor as the work progressed and proper certificates were obtained from the architect. The contractor gave security for the proper performance of the contract. The payments were not made as the contract provided, but much ahead of time. Finally the contractor failed, and the surety was called on to pay. He said, after he had completed his examination, "No. You changed the terms of the contract and the terms of my obligation." The owner took it to court, but lost, and eventually had to go out and expend a lot of extra money to get his building completed, merely because he didn't keep to his contract.

Any number of other changes in the conditions may relieve the surety. The renewal of a note without his consent, the failure to hold back part of a contract price, as the contract required, the alteration of a note by changing the rate of interest, or the time of payment, or the amount of the note, or the date, or an alteration in a lease, or anything that puts the security in a different position toward the obligation he assumed.

If you have dealings with anybody, in which he has given security, be sure not to give him any privileges or extensions without first asking the security if he has any objections.

DILLSBURG, PENNA.

Bulletin Publishing Co., Print, Dillsburg, Pa.

The Bulletin Publishing Co., of Dillsburg, who printed this circular, and without space. Making necessary allowance for the limitations of a country printing office, I should think the Bulletin people could have done better than this. They certainly have some job type that could be combined with taste, and if they don't know how to combine it, they ought to take a good printers' trade paper and learn.

Now what ails this circular, typographically? Chiefly bad combinations and bad selections of job type. Instead of putting three styles in the headlines, "The Big Store," etc., the whole four lines should have been put in one style type. There was no sense at all in making a head of "Notions, Staple and Fancy Specialties," there is nothing notable about that; it is too vague. The headline "Shoes" is too big—no sub-head ought to be quite as big as the main heading. The cuts add nothing because they are not connected up with the text. The advertisement does not even say that the store handles these things. There is too much on this circular, as at present arranged. It is probable that by cutting "Notions, Staple and Fancy Specialties" out as a head, and setting "Shoes" smaller, enough additional space could be gotten to loosen the type up and make it more readable.

So much for the typographical end of it. From the ad-writing end, I think the whole circular much too general. This was evidently the big fall announcement. The store was full of new goods and ready for the new season's business. The advertisement was to give the news of the store. Does it do it? In my view it does not. It tells nothing except to make the general statement that we have in stock the largest and most complete line, etc., etc., etc. Take Sweater Coats. "Our line consists of the newest and snappiest ideas brought out for Fall." Why not tell what some of them are? The advertising of Sweater Coats in this ci should have been exactly t giving the news of the new Take Gloves, "You will find very exceptional values." But and where are they? The a tisement is silent, though it w plain duty to speak, especially apparently it could have sa much.

ust About the Most Unique Scheme Yet hio Concern Has Plan by Which Grocers Can Give Customers Insurance Policies, Under Which, if Sick, They Can Get for Six Weeks the Same Quantity of Groceries Which They Got When Well. "Store Money" is a Part of the Scheme.

One of the most unique schemes or grocers which has ever appeared nanates from Dayton, Ohio, where concern is introducing a form of nsurance which gives a consumer, ho is sick, the same quantity of roceries which he or she bought hen well. The thing lasts six eeks. The grocer gives an insurnce policy to every customer, payng 3 per cent. on the amount of the ustomer's purchases. He cannot et the policies unless he introduces store money" into his business. Store money" is dummy money hich is used instead of the real. t the end of the month, or week, henever the customer pays, he imply substitutes real money for he dummy.

The whole scheme is told in the ollowing statement by the company, which is supposed to be read y consumers. It is interesting nough to reproduce in full:—

By purchasing your groceries from merchants who use Store Money in the handling of their credit accounts you will be given, without 1 cent of cost to you, an ironclad accident and health insurance policy in a $100,000 bonded company, incorporated under Ohio State laws. The policy will be made out to you for an amount equal to your average weekly grocery bill, and in case you become disabled because of sickness or accident you receive that amount of groceries, without 1 cent of cost to you, each week, up to and including a period of six weeks, if you are disabled that length of time. If you are disabled only one or two days, you receive free groceries accordingly during that time.

For example: We will suppose your average weekly grocery bill amounts to $5. Your policy will be made out for $5. If your average weekly grocery bill is $10, your policy will be made out for $10, etc. Then in case you become disabled because of sickness or accident, you receive that amount of groceries from your grocer each week up to and including a period of six weeks, if you are disabled that length of time.

Should you meet with an accident which results in your death within twenty-one days from date of accident, your family receives not only the regular amount of groceries as provided in the policy each week while you are disabled, but upon your death receives in addition five times that amount.

The grocer pays the insurance company for the policy. It costs him 3 per cent. of the amount of insurance he carries on you. Then when you are disabled he gives you your groceries without cost and the insurance company pays the grocer for them.

These grocers guarantee that they will not increase their prices 1 cent because of giving this protection. Perhaps you may be wondering how they can afford to do this, but it is very easy to understand, as we shall explain. First, these grocers save 5 per cent. in the handling of their credit accounts by using Store Money and eliminating useless waste—no more book work—no more wasted time, supplies and other expenses. Second, they consider insuring their customers a much better profit sharing plan than any premium scheme. Third, the 3 per cent. which is paid by the grocers for the insurance policies is only a part of what they save by the use of Store Money.

Store Money is a credit plan and enables the merchant to do away with the necessity of writing down each and every item the customer buys. It is made up in the same size and denomination as real money, from 1 cent to $1.

The grocer lends you a supply of this store money with which to do your buying from one settlement day until the next. You don't pay for it in advance, but simply O. K. a receipt for the amount you receive. This makes it impossible for you to be charged wrong. Then you spend this money for groceries just like you would real money, and on the following settlement day you pay for the amount you have spent. In this manner these grocers handle their credit customers just as easily and with no more expense than their cash customers. Cash customers also are entitled to this free protection.

The Current Apple Crop Fair Average But Below Last Year.

The September 1st forecast of total apple production this year in the United States, as reported by the Bureau of Crop Estimates, U. S. Department of Agriculture, is 67,679,000 barrels of three bushels each (agricultural and not commercial basis), as compared with 76,670,000 estimated produced last year, of which not quite 65 per cent. were sold. In the past ten years estimated production has exceeded the present forecast five times. Taking the country as a whole, it thus appears that the apple crop will be nearly an average, but 12 per cent. smaller than last year's large crop. The crop is larger than last year in the Atlantic coast States, including New York and Pennsylvania, and in the Pacific coast States, but smaller in practically all the interior States except Michigan, which has about 34 per cent. more than last year. For the first time this year an attempt has been made to forecast the crop by important varieties.

The thoughtful retailer is bound to admit that nationally advertised goods are the retailer's salvation. They enable him to do twice the business he could otherwise do, and to do it with almost no selling labor. The dealer who ignores or rejects their help in doing a large business at low expense, is an exceedingly shortsighted man.

Let the Figures Talk

¶ When you get a minute figure up the retail profit on Wheatena in comparison with the retail profit (or loss) on other wheat cereals.

¶ We haven't spent a dollar advertising Wheatena where other concerns have spent a thousand. But it is astonishing what widespread distribution we have gotten from it. You will find Wheatena easy to sell. The hearts of selected wheat.

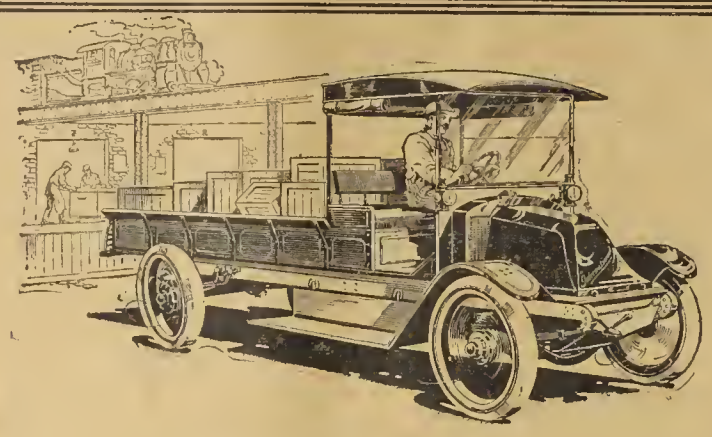
Wording of stamp of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association

Facsimile of stamp of Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers' Representatives

This Boycott Would Be Perfectly Legal

If all retailers would say to all manufacturers, "We will sign no specialty orders that do not bear a stamp," (one of the two shown above) it would not be long before all manufacturers would put the stamp on.



It would pay retailers to go that far. They have no protection when they sign an unstamped order—they have every possible protection when they sign a stamped order. We say again that it would pay them to boycott the unstamped order absolutely.

As a matter of fact, a manufacturer needs no reason for adopting the stamp outside of his own selfish interest. Jobbers pay more attention to a stamped specialty order in a minute than they pay to an unstamped order in a week.

The specialty stamp is a fine thing for everybody—except for crooked salesmen.

WITH AN

International Motor Truck

You simply can't realize the value of an International Motor Truck as a business builder until you use one, or—until your competitor gets one. You will notice, though, that no man who once uses an International Motor Truck ever goes back to horses.

Why is that? There are many reasons. The truck costs less money than the horse outfits whose work it does. The upkeep is less. It takes less work and less time than horses to keep in condition. It's a money saver, a time saver, and a steady worker, but—more than all these put together—the International Motor Truck is a business builder.

THREE MODELS—THREE LOW PRICES

E —1500 pounds capacity, with express body, complete . . . . . $ 950
H—1500 pounds capacity, internal gear drive (chassis) $1225
F —2000 pounds capacity, internal gear drive (chassis) $1500

Any model can be equipped with pneumatic tires for $50 more than the above prices. All prices are cash f. o. b. factory.

Is it any wonder that over 13,000 successful business men use and boost for the International Motor Truck? It makes money for them. A line to the address below will bring you figures showing what you may expect an International to do for you.

Nothing will more quickly bring you good profitable business, for everything pays a good profit before the cutter gets at it, and the cutter never gets at it until it has been out for a while.

Tell Your Clerks to Read These Points for Retail Clerks by a Wholesale Grocer. A Clerk's Manner in Serving Customers.

The Haserot Co., wholesale grocers of Cleveland, Ohio, has issued a long list of suggestions to grocery clerks which are worthy of being reproduced here. No retail store, in efficiency, in popularity and in prosperity, rises higher than the calibre of its clerks. We suggest that every reader hereof tell his clerks to read every word of the following:—

You are the coming business men of our country. To be successful as a business man, however, you must first be successful as a clerk. The most successful business man is the man who can best serve the wants of the people.

In every branch of business you are dealing with people. A business man is no more or less than a servant of the people. There is no business that puts you in contact with people like the grocery business.

If I had a hundred boys to educate for business men, no matter what particular line I wanted them to follow, I would start them in the grocery business.

To be successful business men you must know all about every branch of the business you are engaged in, and to glean that knowledge you must necessarily start at the bottom and work your way to the top.

The president of any corporation must be thoroughly conversant with every element of his business in order to be successful and gain the respect of his employees.

My advice to every young man is: Start at the bottom and work your way to the top. Learn the business you are engaged in thoroughly. Don't change your position for the sake of a dollar or two a week. The boy that is willing to quit one job and take another for the sake of a dollar or two a week will never get anywhere.

In most instances every time you take a new job you are starting all over again. This is a handicap. Stick to one job and prosper. Be loyal to your employer and be loyal to your fellow clerk, and advancement will follow. It is loyalty and team work that wins.

Successful merchandising is the art of getting the public to prefer spending its money with you. To effect this condition you must give the public the desired cause, and that cause is "quality" and "service."

Aside from quality and service, the strongest feature I know of to gain patronage is courtesy. To be courteous you must possess an amiable disposition.

Be obliging always. Show your customers that you are willing to put yourself out to favor them. Don't approach a customer with the idea of getting rid of her quick.

If you are busy getting out orders for a certain delivery when a customer calls, or if she calls about the time you are going to lunch, don't approach her as if she were a hindrance.

Unless you show her the same attention and offer her the same courteous consideration she demands and is entitled to, it would be better if you would let someone else wait on her.

Your employer's profit is governed by the maner in which you serve your people. In every transaction you make, consider your employer's and your customer's interests mutual. See that both profit.

Treat the business as if it were your own. Look upon each item in the store as money, and consider it your own money.

Curtail waste. When you see the bananas turning black, or the strawberries decaying, make an extra effort to dispose of them. Go to the boss and say to him, "Don't you think we better make a special price on these bananas and a special price on these strawberries to get something out of them before they prove a total loss to us?" Call up a restaurant or a hotel and see if you cannot sell them these goods for immediate use.

I have frequently noticed while standing in stores that the clerk while waiting on a customer is called to the telephone. He leaves the customer without even excusing himself. He goes to the telephone with his mind set on getting back to the customer in the store. This is a disadvantage in two ways:—

First.—It is doing the customer in the store an injustice by keeping her waiting.

Second.—He does not give the proper attention to the customer on the telephone. If the lady on the phone says "Send me 50 cents' worth of sugar and a quart of beans," he is glad because she doesn't want more goods. That's dead wrong. By giving preference to telephone calls you encourage your people to stay away from the store. You show the customers in your store that they can get better service over the telephone than by coming to the store.

This is a disadvantage to your business, because you know as well as I do that you can sell your customers more goods if they come to the store, because they see the things you have and are attracted by your displays. Therefore, you should encourage them to visit your store all you possibly can.

When talking to a customer over the phone, say to her, "Mrs. Smith, we have some very nice prunes. I would like to have you see them. Won't you drop in when you are down this way?"

While it is an advantage to get your customers to come to your store, there are, of course, some who prefer ordering by phone, and you want that business and you can make it valuable.

In taking orders over the telephone you should not simply go to the phone with the idea of getting an order. You should have at your tongue's end something special to suggest.

When a customer phones in an order for 50 cents' worth of sugar and a quart of beans, say to her, "Mrs. Smith, we have some very nice strawberries." If she orders a quart of strawberries, then say to her, "Have you ever tried our —— brand of canned peas? They're delicious." (In suggesting these various articles name one at a time.)

In view of the efforts mail order houses and soap clubs are making on coffee and tea, you should especially feature these items. You should be conversant with the customers who are not buying coffee and tea of you. Consult each customer's account and see what items she is not buying of you.

If Mrs. Jones is trading at your store, but isn't buying her coffee and tea, make an extra effort to sell her coffee and tea when taking her order. Say to her, "Mrs. Jones, we are having lots of compliments on our —— coffee. I would like to send you a pound. I know you would like it." If you suggest it the right way, the chances are to one she will let you include pound of your coffee.

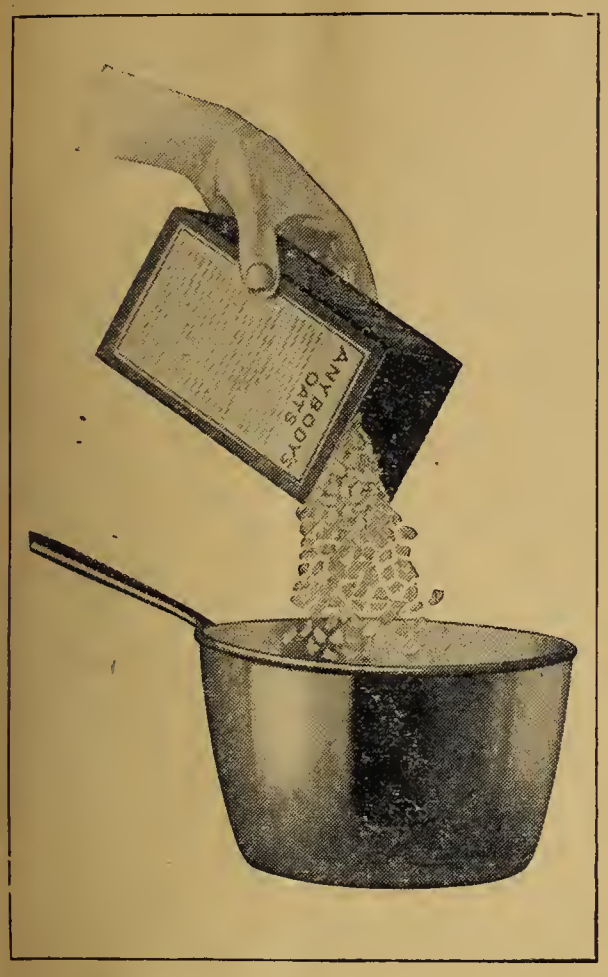
It is especially important to sh added courtesy and consideration new customers. Whenever you a strange face in the store, make extra effort to wait on her promp and please her.

If she receives better treatm at your store than at the st where she is accustomed to tradi you will get her business and th make your services more valua to your employer.

Last, but not least: Pract economy. Save. No matter wh amount of salary you draw, sa a little of it.

How the Mail Order Business Evolv

More Than Other Businesses It Takes on New Shapes Undergoes Radical Changes. A Fish Company T Started to Sell Fish by Mail, But Now Sells Can Vegetables and All Sorts of Things Not at All Al With Fish. Prices Nothing to Fear.



It has been the experience of every mail-order concern that has ever gone into business, that as time goes on they get into the thing deeper, add lines that they had no intention of handling in the beginning, and completely change the character of their business. The Larkin concern is a good example of this. In the beginning, as everybody knows, the Larkin Co. sold only soap and kindred things. Today they sell a full line of groceries and are widening their line as rapidly as possible. The history of all other mail-order businesses is the same. More than any other business, the mail-order business seems to be peculiarly susceptible to enlargement and evolution.

The Consumers Fish Co., a mail-order house selling direct to consumers from Gloucester, Mass., has sent us a copy of its catalogue, and we notice that it also is a case in point. The Consumers Fish Co. began its business selling fish alone, its talking point being that it was located in the heart of the fish district and could therefore sell the consumer better stuff than he could get from his local dealer. The catalogue reveals the fact that this concern, like all the others, has been tempted out into the general mail-order field. Notwithstanding its name, Consumers Fish Co., it now sells string beans, canned corn, peas, lima beans, asparagus tips, pilot bread, blueberries, hulled corn, preserved figs, baked beans, brown bread, imported canned vegeta olive oil and other things not in least connected with the orig idea.

In the case of the Consum Fish Co., certainly the average tailer has no reason to fear its c petition, judging by the pr quoted in the catalogue. Some these are as follows:—

Extra Bloater mackerel, 10-lb. pail	$3
No. 2 mackerel, 10-lb. pail	3
Boneless codfish, 5-lb. box	1
Lobsters, No. 1 cans, doz.	8
Kippered herring, No. 1 cans, doz.	2
Columbia River salmon, No. 1 flats, doz.	3
Finnan haddie, 1 doz. cans	3
Refugee string beans, doz.	2
Yellow wax beans, doz.	1
Maine corn, doz.	2
Extra sifted peas, doz.	3
Green lima beans, doz.	2
Asparagus tips, doz.	2
Preserved figs, No. 1 cans, doz.	3
Norway smoked sardines, quarters, doz.	2
French sardines, halves, doz.	7

Clam chowder, doz.	3
Clam bouillon, No. 2 cans, doz.	2
Baked beans, small cans, doz.	1
Imported Brussels sprouts, doz.	2
Italian olive oil, qt.	1

There is not one of these pri which is low in any sense of t word. On the contrary, they are extremely high. Some of them, t American sardine price for stance, are enormous. Any gro can sell all around them, yet t Consumers Fish Co. is supposed be a rather large business. It evidently taking trade from so grocers.

Luscious Quaker Oats Flakes or Others

Nearly everywhere folks find this choice presented.

There are Quaker Oats, made of queen grains only—fragrant and flavory, immensely inviting. And there are oat foods less tempting.

Either costs ten cents per package, which is only one-half cent per dish. One is a welcome dish. Children enjoy it.

It becomes the favorite breakfast, as it should be wherever folks prize vim.

The other is considered duty food.

We urge that this dish, above all others, should be made delightful. It is the premier grain food, rich in rare elements. Housewives who serve it should insist on the finest oat flakes made.

Quaker Oats

The World-Wide Vim-Food

The facts are these:

Quaker Oats is the favorite brand wherever oat lovers live. It is so all the world around.

It won that place on flavor. Nowhere do people find another oat food so enticing.

The reason is this:

Quaker Oats is made of just the big, plump grains. We get but ten pounds from a bushel.

No puny grains, starved and insipid, go into this premier brand.

Please remember that. Whenever you ask for Quaker Oats you get this extra grade.

And you always will.

Cutting and Selling Fresh Meat to Best Advantage

In this department from time to time will appear practical information, prepared by an expert meat cutter, as to how to cut various meat sections to the best advantage.

No particular effort will be made to quote absolutely correct prices in the various examples given, as prices vary from place to place and from day to day. The object is to elucidate principles. If they are made clear, the reader can apply them to any prices.

Cutting and Selling Beef.

To sell beef at retail I have divided as follows: Rounds, Loins, Rump, Flank and Cod, Suet and Kidney, Shanks, Ribs, Plates, Chuck, Neck, Trimmings and Waste.

To cut beef for wholesale I give you the per cent. of each hundred pounds each cut will be:—

19 per cent., Loin.
24 per cent., Round Rump on.
4 per cent., Flank Kidney and Suet.
11 per cent., Prime Rib.
10 per cent., Plate.
24 per cent., Square Chuck.
4 per cent., Shank.
3 per cent., Neck.
1 per cent., Waste.

Side of beef must be divided one rib on hind quarter loin cut full; 7 Prime Ribs cut full 10 inches from chine bone; shank cut close to body joint. I have allowed only 1 per cent. waste, and beef sold by this table must be handled quick and weighed close.

EXTRA BEEF CUTS.

Extra Rounds.
Extra Loins.
Extra Chucks.
Extra Ribs.
Extra Plates.

To sell 500-pound carcass of beef:—

Cost 18 cents	$90.00
Plus 25 per cent.	22.50
	$112.50
66 pounds Round Steak at 30 cents	$19.80
78 pounds Loin Steak at 33 cents	25.74
30 pounds Rump Roast at 24 cents	7.20
14 pounds Back Round at 30 cents	4.20
20 pounds Flank and Cod 12 cents	2.40
10 pounds Suet at 9 cents	.90
20 pounds Shank at 6 cents	1.20
6 pounds Trimmings and Waste	....
58 pounds Ribs at 30 cents	17.40
56 pounds Plate at 15 cents	8.40
112 pounds Chuck at 21 cents	23.52
10 pounds Neck at 15 cents	1.50
16 pounds Shank at 6 cents	.96
4 pounds Trimmings and Waste	....
500 pounds bringing	$113.22

This gives us a total of 500 pounds, bringing $113.22, a gain of 72 cents over the profit of 25 per cent. we were to make.

One of the hardest problems we have to solve is to establish the differences in value of the hind and front quarters, therefore supply and demand must largely govern you in this. When you are forced to decline the price on one cut, you must advance on another to make up the difference. You will notice in fat cows that the hind quarters are often heavier than the fronts, but in these cases you have a large wasty bag and a big fat kidney that you must allow for.

To retail beef costs 21 cents:—

500 pounds at 21 cents, cost	$105.00
Plus 25 per cent.	26.25
	$131.25
66 pounds Round Steak at 36 cents	$23.76
78 pounds Loin Steak at 37½ cents	29.25
30 pounds Rump at 27 cents	8.10
14 pounds Back Round at 30 cents	4.20
20 pounds Flank and Cod at 15 cents	3.00
10 pounds Suet at 15 cents	1.50
20 pounds Shank at 6 cents	1.20
6 pounds Trimmings and Waste	....
58 pounds Ribs at 36 cents	20.88
56 pounds Plate at 18 cents	10.08
112 pounds Chuck at 24 cents	26.88
16 pounds Shank at 6 cents	.96
4 pounds Trimmings and Waste	....
500 pounds bringing	$129.81

Note: As beef increases in price, your better cuts advance very rapidly, as the rough or common cuts won't stand the proportionate raise.

To Prevent Soaked and Adulterated Oysters in Interstate Commerce.

With the opening of the oyster season the food and drug officials of the U. S. Department of Agriculture have given notice to those who ship oysters in interstate commerce that they will continue their active inspection to precent shipment of polluted oysters or shipment of shucked oysters that have l soaked to increase their bulk. notice applies also to dealers of oys in the District of Columbia and Territories, which are directly u Federal supervision. Those in ch of this work report that the oyster t in general have expressed a desir co-operate with the Department in curing a grade of oysters which are from adulteration of any kind. M have asked the Department to sug a method of washing oysters wit swelling them to an extent that co tutes adulteration under the regulati The Department believes that mode washing is probably necessary and sirable, but objects to any method excessive washing which increases volume of the oysters to an appreci extent, either by permitting the oys to remain in the liquid and absorb water by the so-called "plump method, or by the introduction of excess of free liquid in the container which the oysters are shipped.

MAKE A WINDOW DISPLAY

—OF—

Baker's Fresh Grated Coconut

Your window is your best help in selling goods, so you should dress it with goods it will pay you to sell, and that means BAKER'S FRESH GRATED COCONUT, which will pay you good profits and is better than any other prepared coconut for both you and your customers. It is better for your customers because it is fresh grated coconut in its own milk—sweet, tender, full of natural flavor, and ready for use without work or bother. It is better for you because there is no loss from spoilage. We guarantee it to be sweet and white when opened; it will not lose flavor, turn yellow or become rancid. This means every can you buy is a can you can sell.

We are now advertising BAKER'S FRESH GRATED COCONUT in the leading magazines and you will be sure to have a large demand. That is why we suggest the window display at this time to show your customers you have the goods. We'll help you with the display. Write us for window display, counter display cards, hangers and recipe books. Get your customers started on BAKER'S FRESH GRATED COCONUT as soon as possible because they'll like it so much they'll buy it oftener than either whole or dessicated coconut.

This means extra sales and profits for you.

WITH THE EDITOR

Advancing a Nickel Where a Cent Would Do.

At the recent convention of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, Mr. Richard Dickinson, president of the National Canners' Association, advanced an argument as to why retailers should advance prices by single pennies instead of by nickels. The subject has been discussed before, but the argument is still worth printing:—

> Another practice is the custom of making a retail price of 10, 15 or other multiple of 5 cents for each package. When a can of food has been retailing for some time, for instance, at 10 cents, and then on account of higher manufacturing costs this retail price must be raised, an increase to 15 cents will very materially curtail the consumption of that article, whereas, a price of 11 cents would affect it very slightly, if at all. It is true that penny change is very unpopular in certain localities, but it is equally true that the chain stores and mail order houses invariably make their price per package to the nearest cent, and in many cases their quotation by the dozen or by the case is figured likewise.
> It is contended by some that this custom of even money prices is too firmly fixed to be changed. It is claimed, and with some evidence, that the reason for this custom is the psychological attitude of the consumer who would rather pay the even money than go to the trouble of making change. This claim may be founded partly on truth, but the general growth of penny change in the larger and more successful retail stores would indicate that the consumer is ready to change the custom.
> In order, then, to prevent this increasing cost from causing a considerable reduction of the volume of business, we must choose one or more of the following courses: (1) A general change from the custom of "even money" retail prices; (2) a narrower margin for transportation and distribution, or (3) a reduction in the size of the can.

The sensible thing to do here is to educate the retailer into advancing only as much as he needs to to protect his profit. If the advance to him is 12 cents a dozen, and if he was making a proper profit before, he obviously needs to advance only 1 cent per can. Some retailers say their customers would prefer them to advance to 15 cents, because 15 cents is even money and easier to handle. Some consumers may be like that, but I cannot believe that most of them are. Not in these days.

A retailer who has to pay a wholesale advance of 1 cent a can, and who advances his own price 5 cents, on the above theory, may get away with it for a while. But sooner or later, if he has any competition at all, the impression will get abroad that he is a high-priced man. "Don't go to that store; they charge fearfully high prices." Merchants who have acquired that reputation have spent thousands of dollars to get rid of it, but have found that it sticketh closer than a brother.

High Prices Good for the Retailer.

If history did not prove the contrary, one would scarcely believe that food products could advance as they have, and business remain as prosperous as it is. Many staples, among them flour, are ruling to-day higher than they have done since the tremendous advances of Civil War period. Think of sauer kraut at $18 a barrel against a normal figure of $4.50. One would think present prices would be wholly beyond a great many people, and that a good part of the population would have to come down to the simplest foods. But the buying goes right on. In fact in American history high prices have always been accompanied by prosperity, and the higher the prices the higher the prosperity. Conditions existing during the Civil War period supply a good example.

It is good for the retail merchant for prices to take a high level, and to remain upon it until the people get used to it. Merchants can always get better profits after a period of high prices is over. People have grown accustomed to paying a high price, and after the high wholesale price begins to decline, the retail price can be gradually lowered without sacrificing the dealer's profit. It is growing harder and harder to get a profit continuously when prices hold a certain level for a period of months or years. When there is competition, the tendency is always down, never up.

Nothing on earth seems more elastic than the spending capacity of the average buyer. He manages to stand—and without apparent inconvenience—advances which viewed before they happened, he would have sworn would destroy him.

Fights That Yield Nothing.

Many people, in contending for a principle, entirely lose sight of the practical question involved. It is obviously useless to spend a thousand dollars fighting for a principle which when established can instantly be gotten around.

Take the fight New York S has been making against the packers' practice of weighing in casing with ham and bacon. R ers hereof are familiar with If a ham weighs 14 pounds ounces, and the packing weig ounces, the packer will charge 15 pounds of ham and he jus the practice on the ground tha wrapping as a protection is w all it costs. The authorities New York deny this and say it fraud, and a New York court upheld them. Retail meat de in New York cannot hencef follow this practice, although packers are still doing it.

Being charged for the casin the ham rate, but being unabl get it back from their custome the same way, what did the York retailers do? They me advanced the price of their ham bacon 1 cent per pound. They bate the customer for the w pings, as they are now oblige do, but at the 1 cent advance net exactly what they netted be The consumer pays for the w pings as he did before, and pays identical amount that he paid fore. Interest From Trust Companies.

Adamstown, Pa.,
September 27, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Do you consider the Citizens' Saving and Trust Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, a safe banking house? Are they rated very strong? What do your best trust companies of Philadelphia pay interest on time deposits (what rate)?

Thanking you for any information you may be able to give, we remain, Yours very truly,
H. F. Snader & Co.

The Citizens Savings and Trust Co. of Cleveland, Ohio, is a rich and highly rated concern. Its capital is $4,000,000 and its surplus $2,500,000.

Most of the Eastern trust companies pay not over 3 per cent. on time deposits, although a few pay 4. The savings fund companies average 3.65 per cent. There are some companies in Pittsburgh and some in Ohio that pay 4. Other bankers say these companies cannot afford to do so, but they have done it for years and nothing has happened. Anybody who sees what bank stock is quoted at, and notes the big dividends many such concerns pay, will hardly be convinced that a trust company cannot afford to pay 4 per cent. on time deposits.

As to a Philadelphia Jobbing House Selling Consumers.

East Greenville, Pa.,
September 25, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Enclosed find letter received from M. Eiseman & Sons. You will also find a certain part marked which I will try to explain as follows:—

About a year ago Eiseman & Sons started to ship goods to private families in our town and upon noticing them they still continued till the present time. Now they send us letters and want to make us believe different.

What is your suggestion about the same?

I had satisfactory returns with the contest for the most popular married woman, but I always have more luck with contests for children.

I am running a punch card at the present time, giving away a 42-piece dinner set with every $5 purchased, plus $3 in cash.

C. M. Hertzog.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has had several complaints that Eiseman & Sons, who are Philadelphia wholesale grocers, were selling consumers. The concern has never denied it, so far as we have seen. It appears from what Mr. Hertzog sends in that they are now issuing a "Cash Bulletin," through which they expect to sell to grocers. In this they say: "The greatest danger beyond a doubt, menacing the survival of the individual to-day, is the chain store and direct-to-consumer mail order houses." But as we see it, another danger, equally as serious, is the direct-to-consumer jobber.

The Lush Sales Company's Scheme.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I should like to know what you think of the following plan that is offered by the Lush Sales Co. of 147 Church street, New York City, which is as follows: They offer four prizes, consisting of piano, talking machine, watch and silverware, given to the winners in the contest. They claim to give you a guarantee bond to cover the 25 per cent. increase of business which they claim to guarantee to increase for the retailer. Now the dealer must give five notes maturing at certain times from date of contract for $375 in total. Did you ever know of any retailer being satisfied with the method that these concerns employ with their sales? Do results justify the cost?

John J. Wright.

This scheme is so familiar that we can unhesitatingly advise you not to go in it. There are two tricks in it. First, the guarantee bond. If you will examine this closely you will find that usually it is not what it purports to be. Of course we have not seen the Lush guarantee bond and are not referring to it specifically. But what we say is generally the case; the bond is mostly worthless. Second, the notes. If you sign those notes they will be transferred to somebody else before the ink is dry on your signature. When that is done, it usually all up with you, for the pe son to whom the notes are tra ferred can usually collect them ev if the Lush concern lies complet down on its contract, goes back its bond and everything else.

There is a way of going into the schemes safely. Briefly, it lies revising the guarantee bond so t it would really amount to son thing, and in making the notes no negotiable, or better still, declini to sign any notes at all. Put t up to one of these concerns and s how quickly it turns it down.

The Lush Co. has a fair comme cial rating, but that wouldn't h you.

The New York Letter

How New York Retailers Get Around the Ham Decisio Exports Reach Unprecedented Total. Butchers Agr Not to Sell Unmarked Meat. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, September 29, 1916.

There has been considerable discussion since the decision that a dealer in ham and bacon could not legally weigh in the wrapper with the ham, as to how the retailer could save himself loss in this respect. The packers are ignoring the ruling and are declining to make a retail buyer any allowance on account of it. A great many of the local dealers have, therefore, adopted the expedient of making an advance of 1 cent a pound on both ham and bacon. After weighing the package just as it comes, they thereupon allow the consumer a rebate of 1 cent a pound for the wrappings, which brings them right back to where they were before. Thus, if a ham weighs 16 pounds at 23 cents a pound, of which, say, 6 ounces are tare, and the price of the ham is increased to 24 cents a pound, or a total of 16 cents, there is nothing to prevent an allowance of 16 cents for the wrappings, whether they weigh 6 ounces or not. The consumer therefore pays for the wrappings at the original price of 23 cents a pound, just as though there had been no law or prosecutions or warnings or anything else. The dealers claim that there is no law that will prevent them from advancing the price of meat, nor is there anything in the net weight law that will prevent them from making the consumer a good libe allowance for the wrappings.

The local trade have been grea interested in the report from Was ington received here during t week that American exports h passed the half billion a mon mark. The Bureau of Foreign a Domestic Commerce shows that t exports for August amounts $510,000,000, which is not only t record for this country, but the re ord for all countries. It is $3 000,000 above the previous hi record, which was established May of this year. The imports, the other hand, showed a decline $47,000,000 as compared with Ju Imports for August were $19 000,000, which, however, is grea than the total of any previous Au ust. All of the statistics coveri exports for the last few mont are far in excess of any previo period.

Two hundred butchers who we summoned by the Department Weights and Measures for weig ing in wrappings with ham a bacon entered into an agreeme with the Department not to hand wrapped meats furnished by t large Western packers unless t packages were plainly marked wi the net weight. This, of cours includes an agreement to char for the net weight, so that, whi the retailers will be paying f ppings at the price of the meat, will not be permitted to pass on to their customers as they ıerly did.

A Little Lesson in Selling a Little Thing—Jar Rings.

Home Canning Has Decreased Because of Spoilage. Spoilage Comes From Poor Jar Rings. How to Tell a Good Jar Ring and How to Demonstrate it to Your Customers.

Most salesmen will tell you that the best way to determine the quality of fruit jar rings is to feel of the surface for a rubbery texture, press the thumb nail into the ring for resiliency, or to bend the ring sharply, in order to see whether or not it will crack.

As a matter of fact, all of these methods are usually unreliable, as it is possible to compound a ring which will feel soft and rubbery when first made which will not cut with the thumb nail, but will show considerable strength and resiliency and will not crack when bent double; yet this same rubber in a few months' time will completely dry out, harden, shrink and crack so that when placed on a preserve jar it is absolutely useless for sealing purposes.

The best test of any ring is to stretch it slowly to the breaking point and see how much strength it requires to break it and how wide the rubber can be stretched before it snaps. No deception can be possible on this point; it is a question of how much live rubber is in the ring. If it contains a proper percentage the rubber should stretch at least twice its original diameter. Many rings stretch three and four times. If it is made of cheap, worthless compounds, it will usually crack when stretched only a little distance.

Test some of the rings on your shelves in this manner and you will determine whether or not you are getting rings with live rubber in them.

Another thing live rubber means is that rings won't die on your shelves. They are good one season after another. Ordinary rings will not carry over, as you doubtless have good reason to know. Live rubber means quality, and rings such as the Good Luck brand, for instance, which are made of pure, red live rubber, will carry in the grocer's stock from season to season with perfect ease and will always make a perfect seal when placed by the housekeeper on the fruit jars.

Don't Sell Cheap Jar Rings

For you can sell GOOD LUCK JAR RINGS the best in the world, for ten cents a dozen

You can buy jar rings so cheap you can retail them at a nickel a dozen.

But if you do you'll be exceedingly sorry. They will not stand up. They are carelessly made, of worthless compounds, that soon hardens and cracks.

In selling jar rings remember that the ring makes all the difference between the contents of the jar keeping and not keeping. No housewife, if she understands, will run the risk of spoiling her canning to save less than half a cent on a ring.

Good Luck Rings are made of the finest, newest rubber, they stand up in every way. Stand even the strain of the modern "cold pack" method of canning.

We are advertising Good Luck rings to your customers, and we will help you to do it, too. In the corner of this advertisement is one of the electrotypes we will give you for use in your own paper. Write for it.

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"Cut down your sugar bills by using part KARO instead of all sugar in your general cooking—you will effect a material saving and at the same time improve the quality of your cooking. Write Corn Food Products Company for a cook book."

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants

It is unfortunate that housekeepers in general have given up the practice of home canning because the large percentage of spoilage and it is also true that the United States Department of Agriculture has conclusively shown by exhaustive tests that defective rubbers are responsible for a larger percentage of spoilage than any other individual cause.

This explains why, at the present time, this department is striving to teach home canning throughout the rural districts with the aid of Government demonstrators, giving public canning exhibitions so that housekeepers may conserve the fruits while they are cheap and farmers in outlying districts make use of much of the fruit which yearly rots under the trees because either there is no market or because the spoilage in home canning has discouraged the practice.

These Government demonstrators teach what is known as the "cold pack" method of preserving by which the fruit is cooked in the jars with the caps and rubbers on instead of being cooked in the old fashioned open kettle and poured into the jars while hot. This process calls for the best rubber rings possible to obtain, as cheap rubber cannot stand the steam pressure and completely go to pieces in the canner, while rubbers like the Good Luck brand, which are used by the department, and recommended by the leading agricultural colleges and domestic science schools are made with plenty of live rubber in them that they show no deterioration after being processed, but as a matter of fact are improved by the excessive heat, which serves merely as an additional vulcanization for pure rubber.

Jars of fruit put up in this manner and sealed with Good Luck rings keep perfectly as long as you choose to keep the jars unopened.

When buying your fruit jar rings this year ask the salesman whether or not his jar rings are guaranteed to stand the "cold pack" method. Ask him whether they have been approved by the Good Housekeeping Institute, conducted by "Good Housekeeping Magazine."

All these points mean quality, and quality is the one thing necessary in any good grade of rubber if they are to stand up and deliver the service expected of them.

The list here presented includes practically every leading magazine and periodical, and products that are not advertised in at least some of them are hardly advertised in this way at all, although they may be in newspapers or in direct ways, such as sampling, demonstrating, etc.]

Fresh Sausage, Scrapple, Souse, Liver Pudding

Burk's Fresh Sausage

Composed entirely of selected tender pieces of pork, not the ordinary trimmings commonly used. Not cheapened in price and quality by the addition of tripe, boiled rice and sundry substitutes. Correctly seasoned, not offensive to sensitive stomachs because of pungent herbs. Nutritious. In four styles—hashed fine and coarse, linked and in straight casings.

Burk's Philadelphia Scrapple

Prepared from the very best materials—good, wholesome meats and extra fine corn meal. Well boiled and seasoned to suit the most critical. Not to be compared with some cheap products of doubtful hues and colors. Burk's eats as good as it looks. Superior to farmers' products. In pans of 15 pounds each.

Burk's Pig Souse

is a seasonable specialty prepared fresh daily, in pans of five pounds each. The jelly is clear and transparent and free from vegetable gelatines and ill-smelling glue stock. Contains plenty of meat and garnished with slices of lemon and parsley.

Proves attractive when turned out of the pan, and is a quick seller, saving the consumer the trouble of cooking pig's feet, so difficult to obtain at this season of the year.

Burk's Liver Pudding

Of the usual "Burk" standard—clean and unadulterated. Rich in quality and an excellent dish when fried, or, after removing the casing, hashed with potatoes. In rings of 1 pound each.

"KUP KWALITY FIRST KONSIDERATION"

Greetings

We suspended these talks during the summer because we think summer isn't as good a time to talk the sort of Coffee business we do, as the other seasons.

We are back on the job again with you, and here's hoping that your fall and winter coffee season will be as good as it deserves to be.

For some coffee businesses don't deserve to be very good. They don't build for permanence. The most profit they can make for the moment is their motto. Cup quality, and particularly uniformity of cup quality, they entirely ignore, and so the coffee peddler and the chain store and the mail order house, take their trade.

Harisco Standardized Coffees, are a list of standard blends and grades all of which represent the highest possible grade in their respective lines, and all of which are kept to literal and absolute uniformity. Any grocer who is a merchant at all, can build up his coffee department with Harisco Standardized Coffees.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week, except that weak spots appear to have disappeared. The market is no higher than a week ago, but is steady to firm and in good condition. The consumptive demand is fair, although not what it will be a little later.

Coffee.

The coffee market is probably ¼ cent weaker for the week, this including all grades of Rio and Santos. The reason appears to be weak reports from Brazil and a pressure to sell from there. Buyers generally appear to be distrusting the market. Milds are quiet and no more than fairly steady. Java and Mocha unchanged.

Sugar.

The sugar market has made a series of sharp advances during the week, raws having sold as high as 6.02. Sales generally, however, were not made on such a high basis but on 25 points under that. Refined has advanced until granulated ranges from 6.75 to 7 cents, and it is not expected to go higher at the moment. Western beet granulated is being offered but not in such a way as to materially affect the regular market. Consumptive demand for sugar is fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged for the week. Its future will depend upon the corn market. Compound syrup comparatively high, but dull. Sugar syrup and molasses unchanged and quiet.

Canned Goods.

Heavy buying of tomatoes all over the country is responsible for an advance during the week to about $1 a dozen for Maryland 3s. This means an advance of 5 cents for the week. The pack is going steadily forward, and even now would be fair if nothing further was done. There will be some more tomatoes packed, however. A conservative authority estimates the pack at about 13,000,000 cases, which would certainly not warrant any very high prices. Corn is very scarce and very firm. Southern Maine style corn that opened around 60 to 65 cents is ruling at 95 cents to-day. The deliveries of Maine corn will not be more than 60 per cent. New York State will deliver about 25 per cent., and the Illinois pack, which is the principal Western pack, will also make very short delivery. Prices of Illinois corn are about 50 per cent. above normal. Peas are unchanged for the week but firm. Apples show no change and light demand. California canned goods are not moving very actively, but the situation indicates before very long the supply will be small. Small Eastern staple canned goods are in most lines very scarce and very firm. Most of these lines have already been reported upon. Packers of spinach are not offering at all, although the pack opens in about a week. The last quotation on Southern spinach was $1 a dozen.

Dried Fruits.

No change has occurred in dr fruits during the week, except advance of 1 cent per pound in c rants on the other side. Prunes still firmly held, but without m buying in the East, and peaches apricots are steady but quiet. R ins show no change for the week

Fish.

No change has occurred in mackerel situation during the we The embargo on the exportation mackerel from Norway is still and various exporters are atten ing to have it lifted. At pres there is no bright prospect of Norwegian mackerel this year. T catch of shore mackerel has b unusual, not only in quality but quantity. As previously report the quality has been very fine, the quantity so far salted is ab twice what it was last year. E with this prices, as previou stated, are several dollars a ba above normal. Cod is very sca and very firm, without any imme ate prospect of lower prices. T price is around 5 or 6 cents ab normal. Hake and haddock about 2 cents above norm Salmon of all grades is firm but

Making People Eat More Codfish

If you have an idea that codfish is codfish, you are as wrong as you can be. There are as many grades of codfish as there are of butter.

There is all the difference in the world between Gorton's Codfish and some codfish we could show you, which is perfectly pure.

Any one of your customers could detect this difference. Perhaps they have detected it and stopped using the codfish you have been selling them.

If all the codfish was like Gorton's, the consumption of codfish would increase five fold. Gorton's Codfish is pure, old-fashioned codfish of the finest quality money can buy. You can sell more of it than you can sell of any other brand, because more people will want it, and all that want it will want more of it. Your jobber.

If you haven't used a Howe Refrigerator you have spent 20 per cent. more than you needed to. That's an awfully positive statement. It's a lie and a false representation if we can't prove it.

IVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Wheat and Flour.

ıe Canadian wheat crop of 1916 has officially estimated at 168,811,000 els, as against 376,303,600 bushels year. After allowing 25,000,000 els for seed and 54,000,000 bushels food, it leaves 90,000,000 bushels for rt, but to this must be added the lus of 30,000,000 bushels carried from the 1915 crop, which would a total of 120,000,000 bushels. It ld be impossible to export this quan-because to do so would take every el of wheat out of the country, therefore we deduct from this quantity 20,000,000 bushels for reserves in farmers' hands and visible supplies, leaving 100,000,000 bushels as the maximum surplus for export.

We have pointed out in our letter of September 9th that if prices are forced sufficiently high so as to attract it from the farms, the United States could spare 141,000,000 bushels for export. This gives us 241,000,000 bushels as the maximum quantity that can be obtained from North America, against 512,000,000 bushels exported last year, of which Canada furnished 269,000,000 bushels and the United States 243,000,000 bushels. On account of the high ocean freight rates and the scarcity of ships, the North American surplus is by far the most desirable, as it can be carried at the minimum expense. It is only a 2,800 mile voyage from North America as against 6,000 from Argentina and 12,000 from Australia. A steamer that can make only two round trips from Australia can make seven or eight from North America, and with steamers commanding such high freight rates, time is the most important factor.

As we have repeatedly said in these letters, much depends upon the progress of the crop in Argentina, which is to be harvested in December. All calculations will be upset by a crop failure there, as the importing nations are counting upon a surplus of 120,000,000 bushels from that country.

Here is their estimate of surplus crops:—

Canada	112,000,000 bushels
United States	160,000,000 bushels
Australia	160,000,000 bushels
India	48,000,000 bushels
Argentina	120,000,000 bushels
All others	16,000,000 bushels
Total	616,000,000 bushels

Unfortunately for the importing countries over 25 per cent. of this is in Australia, involving the longest haul, for to go there and back is equal to going around the world. No relief can be obtained from Russia, for even if the Dardanelles are forced within the next few months, navigation will not be open until late April.

The wheat situation is undeniably strong and we feel that present prices will look cheap when once the foreign demand becomes urgent. Keep in mind one fact, namely, North America this year produced only 778,000,000 bushels of wheat, against 1,387,000,000 bushels last year. In other words, our harvest this year is just 56 per cent. of last year's crop, and this on top of the tremendous shortage in other countries.

We are sincere believers in much higher prices.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

The season for evaporating apples is near and those interested in the industry will do well to look back over the season of 1915, so as to avoid any repetition of errors made during that season. It is estimated now (September 15th) that the apples carried over from the past season is about 300 cars in Western New York and about 100 cars from the Middle West. In the stocks that are being carried in Western New York, there are not many cars of high-grade goods and the quality generally runs from low to high prime. There are some choice and fancy goods in warehouse, nevertheless, but the quantity is small.

Most of the stock in cold storage is owned by the manufacturers and are held at prices running from 5 cents to 7 cents per pound, according to quality, storage paid to October 1st.

The conditions for the manufacturer of evaporated apples this coming season are not very favorable at present in any section, chiefly on account of the low prices prevailing, with prospects of no great improvement in prices very soon.

From all advices obtainable it would look as if the chances of selling for export are exceedingly small. All the neutral countries abroad are anxious to buy evaporated products, but are unable to arrange shipping facilities and until something in this way is arranged, little buying in this direction can be looked for, but should a change come where shipments can be made, considerably higher prices could be expected. On the domestic end of the business there should be an improvement in the demand and consumption over what we usually have, as the quality of fresh apples through Western New York, Canada and the Middle West is poor and the supply of barreled apples of good quality will be small from these territories. New England, Hudson River Valley, the Virginias and Maryland report good quality crops and it is thought that the greater part of the barreled apples will come from these parts. Under these circumstances it is reasonable to expect good barreled apples to sell at high prices and this should cause more attention to the buying of evaporated apples by the domestic trade. We believe that this trade can be obtained by handlers, if more care is given in getting out quality and good dry stock that will keep.

Fels & Co.
PHILADELPHIA

It is a well-known fact that a great part of our population do not know anything about the virtues of evaporated apples and how much cheaper they are to the consumer than fresh apples, at the same time filling many places of the fresh fruit. They are delicious for desserts, sauces of all kinds and for a great many manufacturing purposes, bakers, etc.

The trading so far on the 1916 crop for future delivery has been light and there is but a small short interest out at the present time. The sales that have been made run in price from 5 to 5¾ cents for boxed prime and these prices mean about 4 to 4¾ cents to the maker. Taking conditions with the higher cost of labor, fuel, etc., these prices are low and look below the actual cost of production. A number of dryers say that they will not try to run their plants unless there is an improvement in prices. A number of dryers will not run anyway, as in certain sections there will be no apples to dry and make it worth while.

Foreign Grocery Specialties.

Pure edible olive oil last week brought a rather serious advance in price from practically all European olive producing countries. The finest edible qualities are very scarce and supplies are rapidly being exhausted. Our reports, which we consider absolutely reliable, are to the effect that lower prices may not be expected in the near future for olive oil. On the contrary, our friends confidently expect further advances.

Spanish Red Peppers (Pimentos).—Stocks of last season's crop are confined to a few importers. The market is very firm for spot goods, while new crop pimentos are quoted somewhat below to-day's figures. Spain reports that the crop does not look at all good, and we understand that some packers have advanced their prices during the last week. The pimento crop is a very uncertain factor, and not until the crop is harvested may one be sure of the size of the crop. At any rate, new crop pimentos usually do not come to this market before about the close of the year, and it seems to be the opinion of well-informed and conservative interests that forward sales at low prices may prove a very non-remunerative venture.

Cables report that the Italian Government has prohibited the export of garlic, creating a flurry in the garlic market, but stocks being rather unimportant and the demand really not as good as usual, the excitement died away very quickly, although prices for garlic are strong and tending higher, owing to the short supply of keeping quality goods. Like in many other similar instances, it is expected that the Italian Government will give permits without very much trouble to exporters to ship garlic to the United States. Of course, we may be mistaken, but this is our opinion.

Was I Right Here?

Well, I did something last week that I suppose I was a blamed fool for doing. It's the second time I did it since I was on the road.

I told a customer I'd never sell him another cent's worth. It wasn't because of any scrap him and I had, either; I suppose that's the foolishest part of it.

It was because of the way he talked to one of his own customers, and her a woman. I own up that wasn't any of my business, but it happened right before me and I couldn't have helped getting hot and butting in, if I'd a died for it.

The upshot of it was, I told him it was all off between him and me because I didn't like him. It was pretty foolish in me, because nobody can afford to be as independent as that—saying they'll only sell to folks that they like. Howsomever, I'm glad I did it. I'm glad I don't have to go in there any more. And anyway, I didn't sell him much, so it won't make a heap of difference after all.

This man sells mostly meats. He has a grocery and delicatessen but most of his business is meats. He has a big meat business. Before he opened this store in the town where he is now, he had a place in a town about seven miles from there and I didn't sell him, but I'd heard about him, and he didn't have any too good a reputation there.

They said you had to watch him or he'd short weight you.

Well, I got my dose of him twice. Once about a month ago I was in there waiting for him, and a woman about sixty years old came in. The reason I looked at her some was, she looked like my mother and anything that looks like mother looks good to me.

She had a bone to pick with the boss.

"Mr. ————," she said, "I ordered rib chops over the phone yesterday and you sent me shoulder chops. When I order rib chops, I want rib chops and I don't want anything else, please."

You fellows that sell meats are wise to the fact that rib chops are three or four cents better than shoulder chops.

"Nothing of the kind!" he said, mad as a wet hen, "I gave you loin chops, just what you ordered!"

You know there's two ways of saying that. You can say it polite and you can say it ugly. He said it ugly.

"Now see here, Mr. ————," she said, "I know the difference between rib chops and shoulder chops, and they were positively not rib chops at all."

"I know better!" he said loud. "Here's what you got." And he pulled down a hunk of meat. I don't know much about meat, except whether it's tender and tough, and I don't know what it was, but as he was using it as an argument I suppose it was rib chops.

She didn't say any more, but her face got red and she went out. He's just as likely to sell her again as I am to wear corsets to church next Sunday.

"Tain't so!" he said. "My weights was right!"

"Well, she had two of the neighbors in to see her weigh it," said the girl, "and that's what it weighed."

"You go home and tell your mother she don't know what she's talking about," he said. "An says I don't give full weight

lit Men Say It Is Because the stom Has Always Been for the yer to Deduct It Instead of mitting in Full and Getting a eck for the Discount. Thinks Ought to Be Done the Latter ay.

ne National Credit Men's Asso-on has sent this paper a state-t in which it discusses cash dis-ts, and tells why in its judg-, the cash discount has come e abused both by jobbers and lers, usually by deducting it the discount period has ex-l. From the statement we take following:—

Chief among the reasons for the se of cash discount terms is that premium is taken by the buyer l not directly given by the seller. f, at the origin of the cash dis-nt system, provision had been de that should the buyer remit the invoice within a specified e the seller would send him a ck for 2 per cent. of the face of invoice or give his account dit for that amount, the history cash discount terms would have en quite different; but as the yer has the power to take the mium in remitting, he has felt frequently that rather than lose cash discount he would exact it, matter when payment is made, l use threats if his exactions are posed.

The giving of the premium has couraged abuses also. When yers for large enterprises are ving hard bargains with the sell-of merchandise, one of the atest evils that has occurred un-the cash discount system is the d and unusual terms demanded such buyers who have not recog-ed that in the effort to make un-al terms they are doing the cash count system a great hurt and, in t, creating sentiments for its blishment.

No. 383.—Watch Your Contracts or Order Blanks for These Clauses.

Almost every written or printed paper in the nature of a business contract, which comes to me nowadays, has a clause in it which is intended by the seller to remove his responsibility for any verbal statements which his salesman or agent may have made in making the sale. The substance of the clause is: "This paper is the entire contract, and the seller is not responsible for verbal statements made by salesmen."

So general is this practice becoming that is behooves business men more than ever to-day to see that they do not make purchases or contracts on verbal statements which are not incorporated in the written contract or order blank. If they do, and the paper contains the provision I have referred to, the buyer will often find the transaction wholly different from what he expected it to be.

A case has just been decided by a Southern Appeal Court which shows very clearly what I mean. A salesman went to a merchant who was in the market for a particular kind of a machine, and he represented to him that his machine would do a certain kind of work. He was not general in his remarks; he was specific, and he told in detail just what kind of work the machine would do.

The merchant believed him and placed an order, not thinking it worth while to examine the contract, to see if it contained anything which disagreed with the salesman's verbal statements. As a matter of fact, the order blank contained only the following about the work which the machine would do:—

> It is warranted to be made of good material and durable with good care, and to be capable of doing more and better work than any other machine made of equal size and proportion working under the same conditions on the same job, if properly operated by competent persons, with sufficient steam or horse power, and the printed rules and directions of the manufacturer intelligently followed. The condition of the foregoing warranty is that if, after a trial of ten days by the purchasers operating in the manner specified, said machinery shall fail to fulfill the warranty, written notice thereof shall at once be given.

Nothing whatever here about the specific work which the machine would do.

Later a dispute arose over the work of the machine, the buyer claiming that it would not do what the salesman had said it would do. The seller brought suit, and the case was tried, the buyer relying upon the verbal representations of the salesman. He lost at every point. The court said in substance: There were two warranties here. The salesman's verbal representations as to what the machine would do constituted one, and the written language (reproduced above) constituted another. But the written warranty entirely superseded the verbal one, and the buyer had no right to rely upon the verbal warranty at all.

The buyer here also fell down by not notifying the seller that the machine was not satisfactory, but even if he had done that, the decision, I take it, would have been the same, viz: that the statements of the salesman were out of the case, because the written contract contained something inconsistent with them.

How could this buyer have saved himself? By saying to the salesman: "Here, you put what you say in the written contract."

Of course, sometimes fraud is behind these contract provisions as to the seller not being responsible for verbal understandings. Sometimes a sale will be deliberately made by false representations, the responsibility for which the seller seeks to disavow by some such clause as the above. He will not be permitted to do so, if there is fraud.

Such a case was recently decided. The seller told a lot of lies his goods and then made his sign a written contract conta the following:—

> This is the only contract mad us, and it is not to be cha or varied by any promises or resentations by ourselves or people.

The buyer soon found he been done, but when he start show up the seller's false rep tations, the latter pointed t above clause in the contrac smiled triumphantly. The however, soon changed the umph into defeat. The ruling as follows:—

> If the seller made staten which he knew or should

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Don't Talk High Prices.—The other day a clerk was overheard elaborating in the most indignant fashion upon high prices. A big mistake. Let the consumer do that. To be sure, you can't deny it and you can't argue it down, but the condition is entirely out of your hands, as well as that of your employer.

You say our stock of so and so was bought before the big advance, and why not give the people the benefit of it?

If your house cost you $3,000 ten years ago and property in your neighborhood had advanced 100 per cent. in that time, wouldn't you be perfectly justified in asking $6,000 for your house if somebody wanted to buy it?

No good merchant always sells his goods on the basis of cost. He does on a steady market, but to do so on a market like the present one would be utter folly.

You're Included In the Investment.—Your services are bought and paid for the same as stock. Stock is valued according to quality—so are you. The quality of this stock put on the market under a certain label must be sustained. Likewise you. There must be no flogging of duty. No suspension of loyalty. No petty acts of hishonesty. This investment of "you" needs the most careful scrutiny by "you." There is danger in backward slides. There is a lurking tendency in many clerks and many men that are not clerks to "lay down on the job." It is then that you begin to be classed as a non-paying investment. That is where the importance of this scrutiny comes in. Am I growing in value to my employer? Am I developing in myself all of my facilities for a more efficient discharge of my duties? Am I preparing for a more important position? Do I deserve promotion? Deep down in my heart am I i with my job? Do I at all tim operate with the policy of the co

Putting Sugar in Bags is Factory Work

just as much as canning vegetables or bottling ketchup. You keep a STORE to SELL goods, not a FACTORY to PACK them. All your time should be spent in "doing things that pay" and it DOESN'T pay you to put up sugar.

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is ready to sell when you get it. All you have to do is to take the CARTONS out of the CONTAINER in which they are packed and put them on your shelf. And FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is ALWAYS ready to sell, ready to hand out to customers, as convenient for you as canned or bottled goods. The FRANKLIN CARTON enables you to make a positive profit instead of a loss on sugar sales because you save bags, twine and labor, and there is no loss from overweight. You can make this profit on all your sugar sales, because we pack all fast selling grades in the FRANKLIN CARTON, including FRANKLIN GRANULATED, FRANKLIN CUBE (Dainty Lumps), FRANKLIN DESSERT & TABLE, FRANKLIN POWDERED and FRANKLIN XXXX CONFECTIONERS' sugars.

York, Pa., September 14, 1916.
Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—I do not believe any advertising helps the business of the "corner grocer." It only brings the miser and bargain hunter to the store, and they are a nuisance to a business in a neighborhood. They pick out the advertised staples and it is impossible to make anything on that class of people. It pays for a clothing dealer to advertise $20 suits for $14, and still be $4 to the good. It also pays for a chain store to advertise. It brings them all the misers and bargain hunters from all the neighborhoods and there they buy by the basketful, considering every article to be a bargain. But the corner grocer who has only a limited supply of customers, with a very few misers and bargain hunters, and who is compelled to do a square business, without any "bluffs" or "just as good" articles, it is up to him to get fair-minded customers and not bother with the misers and bargain hunters.

The inclosed circular cost me about $5, and I don't think it made $2 extra for me. I am sure I am no exception in the matter.

Let us hear your opinion about it.

Yours truly,
D. JASPAN.

This is rather a pessimistic view of advertising, though without doubt there is some truth in it. The bargain hunters are everywhere, however, and cut prices always seem to find somebody to tempt. The Circular Mr. Jaspan sends was 9 x 12 inches and was printed in black on paper which was not more than fair. Below is the reduced reproduction.

There are some low prices here and I have no doubt that they brought some orders, but all the same I shouldn't expect this circular to get a lot of business. Personally, I shouldn't want it to, I think, not at 12 cents for Cream of Wheat and 4 cents for Ivory soap. Mr. Jaspan gives me the impression that he is in a small neighborhood. If he is, I should never try the cut-price method of advertising on it, for he is spoiling his own small opportunity. He can't go outside of it, I assume, and when he has all the people in it educated to the cut price idea, he will find it very hard to get away from. I should work the quality advertising idea in a small neighborhood just as much as I could, always provided there are people there who can be appealed to on the score of quality. It is a very bad advertising idea to teach people to use only the cheapest foods, unless they absolutely cannot afford anything else. It not only kills profits, but it degrades their taste so in time they become willing to take anything. I would never exploit 13-cent coffee. It is all right to sell it, if you have a demand for it, but I should never educate my customers to use it. It can't pay much profit and it can't give satisfaction to anybody who knows what good coffee is. It is a poor system. All high grade advertisers agree that the best part of advertising is to get people on high grade goods, not only because they pay the dealer better, but because they always suit the customer better. It is all right to offer drives, but my plan would be to offer one or two, instead of making a drive of everything, and to put in the balance of the time on good strong quality talk. If Mr. Jaspan would do this I believe that he would not have occasion to say that he got only $2 back from his $5 expenditure.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the E of Science of Advertising. They be taken up in strict rotation.

How a Grocery Store Makes Money Out of Saturday Specials

First Gets the Stuff to Sell and Then Concentrates on It. Advertising, Window Displays and Solicitation by Clerks Are the Main Factors. Some Results Obtained.

The "Saturday Special" has proven a real business-getter with us and has been a great help to us in building up our business and it can be used by other grocers with equal success. They have not only proven big business getters but very profitable as well, bringing into our store a great many new customers, enabling us to sell a great many goods not on sale.

In planning for these specials we usually try to pick up some article upon which we can make a special price and still make a good profit. This is either done by buying in large quantities or it may be that the wholesaler has some article upon which he is overstocked and upon which he is willing to make a special price in order to cut down his stock, or it may be some article which has proven a slow seller with him and still be a first-class article. This article must be seasonable and it must be a high grade article, that is, we never use an inferior article for these specials. The success, continued success, of these specials depends altogether upon the quality of the goods which we offer and if we were to try to put some inferior article off upon our trade by offering it at a reduced price, these specials would soon lose their trade-pulling power and it would do us more harm than good. So in order to keep the people interested in these specials we always use a good article as our leader, not necessarily a high priced article but an article which we know is good value and will give satisfaction to those who buy.

After picking the article which we shall use as our special for the coming Saturday, we advertise it in the local papers, having our ad. appear in the Thursday and Friday issues. We always have it appear in the Thursday issue for the benefit of our country trade, as the Friday issue is not delivered to the country subscribers until Saturday, and in a great many cases they do not receive their copy until after they have started for town. So in order to get all the country trade we can we use the Thursday issue.

Our ad. used in announcing these specials is usually 6 inches deep and 3 columns wide. At the top of this ad. we place the date upon which this special is to be and the name of the special, as we usually call the special after the article upon which we are making a special effort, as Banana Day, Orange Day, Sweet Potato Day, etc. Below this we run the name of the special, giving the price and some few remarks. If we are offering more than one article as a special we run the most important one at the top and the others following. We do not limit our ad. to the special only, but include other articles such as fresh fruits and vegetables or some articles which we think the public will be interested in.

On Friday we get everything ready for Saturday. We make a window display of the article or articles which are to be used on Saturday, also a counter display, always accompanying these displays with a large sign calling the people's attention to the special. The clerks are instructed to get behind these articles and sell to every person they wait upon. The telephone girl is also instructed to tell every person calling over the telephone and a great many sales are made in this way.

I have picked two of these specials to show you how they are advertised and the results. The first one is a special on sweet potatoes. This special we called "Sweet Potato Day." In planning for this sale we went to our commission merchant and asked for a special price on sweets in quantity, and by buying ten barrels we were able to get them at a very good price, which enabled us to sell them at 36 cents per peck, this price being 14 cents per peck below the price asked by any of our competitors. When the sweets arrived on Friday we dumped them in the window and placed a sign with them calling everybody's attention to the fact that we were selling them for 36 cents. Everybody calling at our store that day was tackled to buy sweets and the results were that we sold the ten barrels long before the demand was satisfied. This sale brought in a great many new customers and enabled us to sell other goods and it proved very profitable as we made better than 30 per cent. upon the sweets alone.

The second special I picked was one held just lately. A number of articles were included this sale so we headed the "Specials at Creath's." The ing article was a small val orange so we ran it first. We also able to buy some very Grimes golden apples at a good price by buying 10 barrels we included them in this sale cents per pound.

The result of this special very satisfactory, selling 90 d of oranges, upon which we 25 per cent.; 10 barrels of ap making a little better than 25 cent., and 9 barrels of sweets.

The volume of business don both of these days was great, ning up close to the $1,000 m Our deliveries were heavy and country trade was excellent.

We have used a great many l ness-getting stunts but have fo the Saturday special the grea of all, and recommend them to grocer who wishes to build u larger trade.

Cashing in on Manufacturers' Advertising.

Grocers are hard to convince that every advertisement inserted in a national publication by a manufacturer of some generally sold product, is an advertisement for their store. It is hard to make them see the connection between the manufacturer's advertising and their store—hard to make it clear that it is so easy and obvious for a retailer to cash in on a manufacturer's national advertising.

One reason is that they don't seem to believe that the manufacturer's advertising is seen by consumers, particularly by the consumers of their territory. In this they are wrong. Before me is a statement by the "Ladies' World," a representative woman's publication, showing the percentage of the worth-while families that it goes to in the various towns. I quote a very few here:—

Dayton, Ohio, one in every 3½ families.
Pittsburgh, Pa., one in every 9 families.
Buffalo, N. Y., one in every 11 families.
Lowell, Mass., one in every 6 families.
Wilmington, Del., one in every 7 families.
Bayonne, N. Y., one in every 4.4 families.
Akron, Ohio, one in every 2.8 families.
Erie, Pa., one in every 5 families.

In a long list of towns the percentage varies from 1 in every 1½ to 1 in every 11, with most of them approximately 1 in every 5.

Now take the little town of Troy, Pa., which has 1,450 population. According to this list, the "Ladies' World" goes to just half the worth-while families there—one in every two. If all the Troy grocers are catering to about the same class of customers, this means that a food advertisement published in the "Ladies' World" is seen by half the customers of every grocer in Troy. What could be more direct than that? It is probably more direct than the grocer's own advertisement of the same brand would be, for that would go in the local paper, which would likely not be read by anything like the same percentage of people.

Advertising Without Beginning or End.

In all Philadelphia trolley cars during the past week has appeared the following advertisement:—

SISTO
It Does the Work
Give it a Trial

All that the advertisement told me was that Sisto did some kind of work, and evidently, in the opinion of its manufacturer, did it well. The work it did might be sweeping a floor, or growing hair on bald heads, or relieving venereal disease. Naturally until I am informed what Sisto's work is, I am not going to try Sisto.

What a lot of outrageous nonsense is perpetrated in the name of advertising!

Where Would We Be Without Oleo?

If the makers of butter had their way, oleo would be excluded from the market. They don't ask that it be totally excluded, for they know they couldn't get away with that, but they would exclude it entirely if they could, and they have succeeded in getting a lot of restrictions which undoubtedly reduce its sale. And of course its competition.

I wonder where we would be to-day if there were no oleo. Print butter costs wholesale in the neighborhood of 41-42 cents. Oleo has had to advance to 21 cents, which is about half the present price of print butter. And oleo is just as clean and wholesome as butter, and in every sense as desirable for food—if it suits the customer's taste.

Without doubt thousands of people are to-day using oleo who would use butter were oleo not available. Most of them are poor people. What kind of butter would they be getting for the price they can afford to pay? Absolute trash, unles they ate half as much as they would normally. They would pay more money than they can get clean, pure oleo for to-day, and for their money they would get stuff that was hardly fit to eat.

Feeling Against Canned Goods.

Prejudice against canned goods comes from unexpected sources. During the week an intelligent, experienced housewife, past middle age, an unusual cook and absolutely modern in all that pertains to the conduct of a home, said this:—

I would never eat canned clam chowder. I always suspect canned fish of any kind. I can hardly bring myself to touch canned salmon; I'm so afraid of it.

Pressed for a reason for such a feeling she gave none except that that was the way she felt. Had anybody known to her ever been affected by spoiled canned fish? No, not that she remembered. Was there any reason why canned fish should be less safe and wholesome than other canned goods? She could give none. But for nearly half a century the packers of fish products have lost that woman's trade because of this strong but wholly unfounded prejudice.

How can that prejudice be removed? I don't believe it can be. I did my best to remove it, but could see I made no impression at all. My belief is that canned g will not come into their own the older generation have p away. Even then the prejudic linger to some extent, but as generation dies it will grow and eventually it will disap Of course all educational i ments such as advertising, lect and so on, will help, but things do not make much hea against the blind prejudice of y

High Living Cost Sure to Bring Increased Supplies of Foods and Staples

There Will Be More of Everything as Soon as the Extraordinary War Demand is Over. Hard to Keep Pace With Advancing Markets. Oleomargarine Latest Line to Move Up. Advances Two Cents in Two Weeks, Due to Advance of All Ingredients.

The most unsatisfactory feature of the general business situation is the general rise in the cost of living, which is unquestionably bearing heavily upon the people of small incomes. There is, perhaps, little comfort to them in reflecting that the conditions are temporary, as they unquestionably are. They are the direct result of the withdrawal of so many men from industry and the enormous consumptive demands of the war. These prices, however, are giving a stimulus to industry which will result in a permanent increase in the supply of all kinds of goods.

In Cuba, for instance, there is great activity clearing new lands and bringing them into sugar production. The same is true in all sugar-producing countries, and it requires no prophet to tell that when the beet sugars of Europe come again into the market prices will be lower than ever before known. The work that is being done for agriculture in this country at the present time gives promise of important results before long. The farmers are increasing their herds, sheep raising is feeling the stimulus of unusual profits, and there are many signs which indicate that the consumer will have an inning later if he can hold out until the time comes.

Readers of this paper have been kept posted about the steady advances in almost every line of food products, and in many products which the grocer and general merchant handles other than foods. As a matter of fact a weekly paper can scarcely keep pace with the markets at the present time.

One of the most recent lines to advance is oleomargarine. Every ingredient which enters into oleomargarine or butterine has advanced, and the manufacturers of oleo state that they have at last been compelled to advance their prices. Oleo oil, neutral oil and all other ingredients have advanced about one-third.

The price of oleomargarine has advanced all told about 3 cents in the last two months, 2 cents of which advance has been made in the last two weeks. One reason for the upward movement is the large demand from munition manufacturers for the various animal fats which can be used for making glycerine.

The average price of oleo, prior to the advance, was 18 cents wholesale. To-day it is 21½ cents.

Retailers Lose Trade to Peddlers and Agents Because They Aren't as Good Salesmen as They Are

So Says an Ohio Contributor Who Seems to Know What He is Talking About. Cultivating Salesmanship and Educating Consumers to See the Peddlers' High Prices, Are the Best Ways of Holding Trade Against Itinerants.

Speaking of peddlers, and the trade they are taking from grocers, we all realize that the peddler or agent as we should call him, sells only articles in which there is a large percentage of profit—mostly tea, coffee, spices, baking powder, extracts, etc. While we are listing baking powder for instance, did you ever stop to think that it requires a salesman to sell a customer an article for 50 cents which in reality is only a 15 or 20-cent quality, by giving her a premium which can usually be purchased from the 5-and-10-cent stores?

Did you ever put yourself in the place of the large distributors furnishing goods to hundreds of agents? They have the manufacturers and large jobbers put up their own brands and pack and carton their own products, roasting their own coffees. Take, for instance, their main warehouse, then the branch distributing house, where the order is put up and shipped to the agent. Think of the energy they must use to get their goods in the hands of the customer. Stop and consider, they go at it systematically. Let an agent go to a customer and try and sell and you will see how he is turned down, but they gradually educate the people to their methods and create a demand.

Don't you suppose if you made the same effort to sell your customer a can of baking powder or a pound of coffee as the agents do, that you would have a great deal better chance of success?

For instance, Mrs. Brown is trading with you—you notice she doesn't buy coffee, you mention the fact that you have a splendid coffee, something above the ordinary. Tell her you are using it in your home. Tell your customers the difference in the quality and in the price. When the customers are buying from a peddler they pay from 10 to 30 per cent. more than they would for standard brands. We must go about the matter systematically and educate our customers till they can see that they are paying a big round price for their premiums.

Above all things you want to bear in mind it takes a salesman to place goods in a customer's house and if we make the same effort as the agent does to make the sales on those products we can't help but see a big increase in our sales. Talk quality, price; draw their attention to the fact yours is a little bit better than the agent's. Talk for future orders so you may win her away from the agent. When she is in need of the articles you have her enthused so she will surely try your brands. If necessary give her a sample of tea or coffee as an investment for it will bring you a good big percentage of profit. Don't be a pessimist or a knocker, as that never helps to draw trade or keep customers, but until we can educate our customers so they can see that they are paying a higher price than what their local merchant is selling the standard articles for, and until the merchant educates himself to be as good a salesman as the agent, he can't hope to succeed—and until that time comes the peddlers will continue to thrive and our profits will grow smaller.

Did you ever stop to think that you could and actually do sell cheaper than the peddler? Your expenses are not as much, you haven't the freight rates from two points and sometimes more; the agent's goods, in order to reach him, must first come from the manufacturer and be shipped to the main warehouse. That is freight No. 1. From the main warehouse to the branch distributing plant is freight No. 2. From the branch distributing plant to the agent is freight No. 3. From the agent to the consumer is the fourth time it is handled. Of course we recognize that the large concerns buy in large quantities, but we must take into consideration the expenses they have. We can, by educating our clerks to talk intelligently to our customers on these articles—how some article is packed and handled—get her interested. Talk quality and point out to her how she is paying an enormous price for her premium. Watch your customers—keep track of what they aren't buying of you—use tact and draw your customer's attention to such articles as she is buying from the peddler. If it should happen to be tea, say Mrs. So and So, by the way, I have here one of the finest teas on the market. Tell her you are using it in your own home—be enthusiastic, find where she buys hers, etc. Then tell her you would like to have her try yours when she makes her next purchase on your recommendation.

As you know, an agent must be at least a salesman to make good and he has educated the public to his method while we haven't been making the most of our opportunities.

Do you not think that if you should make a special effort each week to talk to your customers on a special brand or article, have a display on your counter and some in the window and mention it to each customer and explain its merits and be enthusiastic, that it nearly always means a future sale?

How do the Grand Union or A. and P. Jewel Tea Co. get their goods in nearly every town in the United States? By persistent efforts they have educated the people to their methods while we have been taking things as they come to us, until they have nearly 10 per cent. of the coffee trade today. We are beginning to wake up to the painful idea that we are behind and someone else is selling our customers the goods that yield the retail merchant the most profit.

I know of several stores where their coffee and tea sales average better than 10 per cent. of their sales.

Explain to your clerks how you want to boost your sales; keep a list of your customers and get a line on what they don't buy and then find the reason and rectify it at once. When an agent can sell a stranger an order, why can not the merchant so educate his customers that they will see the folly in patroni agents and peddlers. It is g to take time but this is part of medicine.

Get the local papers to give merchants a little write-up on subject; let your customers k that you are not giving them s thing for nothing, but you are ing them more for their money they can obtain from any age peddler. Until we educate our tomers to this effect and the r merchant becomes as good a s man as the agent, the peddlers continue to thrive and our pr grow smaller.

›gress in the Educational Plan of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association. Big Sales of Granulated Sugar to Go Abroad. Bakers Agree to Mark Weight on Bread. Market Summary.

ial Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, October 7, 1916.

Readers hereof will remember t not long ago the National holesale Grocers' Association nched an educational scheme ich seeks to educate the retailer l make him a better merchant. is in charge of a man who is de- ing his entire time to the work. e following is the report of the ucational Committee as to what s been accomplished up to date :—

Education is something we all eed, and we find one of the greatest roblems is the education of the re- ail merchant. We do not wish to nfer that this applies to every re- ail merchant, because there are housands of the best merchants in he country engaged in the retail usiness, but there are also thou- ands of retail merchants who could e greatly benefitted in the conduct f their business if we wholesalers vould help them in solving some of heir problems. Conditions are hanging in the mercantile world, nd it is more necessary than ever or the retail merchant to have the nost up-to-date system for his busi- ness. There is no doubt in our mind hat the independent retailer of this country can meet all conditions and successfully compete with his larger rivals, the chain-store and mail-order house, but we wholesalers should get n closer touch with him and sug- gest methods for featuring and dis- playing his goods whereby he can in- crease his sales, suggest an account- ing system that is simple and com- prehensive, which will aid him in keeping a closer rein on his cost of doing business. A campaign of edu- cation along these lines will no doubt result in greater efficiency, and will be an incentive for the retailer to educate the consumer and show him why it is to his interest to do his trading at home. There is no doubt in our mind and continued practice has shown that the most economical method for distribution is from manufacturer to wholesaler, to re- tailer, to consumer. It must be re- membered that so far as foods are concerned they are assembled from all parts of the world by the wholesale grocer, and are brought into his stock by the cheapest way in carload lots, eliminating every possible handling charge. The wholesale grocer in turn distributes these goods to his customer, the retailer, in such quantities as required, but always in shipments which are the most economical. For instance, his order may be composed of thirty different items of various classifica- tions, but on account of there being more than 100 pounds in the ship- ment all of the items are billed by the railroad company at actual weight, which means that he pays only the actual freight on each item based on actual weights. This would not be the case if the items were purchased separately from different sources and in quantities less than 100 pounds, as in such cases the railroad company would charge the minimum rate on 100 pounds, al- though the actual weight would be less than 100 pounds. We mention this to show the inconsistencies of the claims made by some people that foodstuffs could be distributed from manufacturer to consumer, and we know and can prove that such a method would be more expensive to the consumer, especially when you consider that there are thousands upon thousands of items in our line in daily demand assembled from all over the United States and foreign countries. The retailer is one of the three links in the greatest and most economical chain of distribution in the country. The manufacturer, the wholesaler and the retailer, whose combined efforts form one of the greatest services to society in the United States are entitled to every encouragement in their efforts to bring about greater efficiency.

In a short time there will be a book published by Rand, McNally & Co., called the "Food Geography of the World," which it is expected will be adopted as a text book by the school systems of this country. The book was written by Mr. Forrest Crissey, whom we know to be one of the ablest writers in the country. The manuscripts for this book have been carefully read over by a com- mittee consisting of Mr. S. B. Steele, Mr. W. F. Bode, Mr. O. B. McGlas- son and myself. Rand, McNally & Co. required this to be done by prac- tical men in the business. This book when completed will contain about 80,000 words, and will be the greatest book on food supplies ever pub- lished.

The Federal Sugar Refining Co. announced during the week that it had sold 30,000 tons of refined sugar to a foreign government to be shipped January, February and March next. Of course this will still further strengthen the situ- ation, although it probably will not prevent prices from being lower as soon as the new Cuban sugar, which is expected to be very abundant, gets under way.

During the week about 300 bread bakers from all parts of the city had a conference with Weights and Measures Commissioner Harti- gan, and after considerable discus- sion agreed to mark the weight on the loaves of bread which they sold. After they agreed to this the cases against them for not having done so were dropped.

Cutting and Selling Beef.—Continued.

The cutting of beef properly is one of the secrets of success that practice only will perfect you in. Strive in all cases to cut smooth. Where you are asked for a 2-pound steak cut 2 pounds and not 2¼ or 2½ pounds, but in case you do cut over or under, if you don't use pennies, give and take, better take when you can. Have a clean box for your trimmings. They make good Hamburger and mixed sausage. If you have not a reduction plant and have the power, get a bone mill. Ground bone for poultry feed will always bring you a few cents per pound. It will make your bank book look better at the end of the month. If a customer wants a few bones for the dog or cat, just ask how much, 5 cents or 10 cents. Very few will expect them for nothing, and if they appreciate their pets they should be able to pay for what they eat. When a lady buys a dress pattern she doesn't ask the merchant to give her a pair of shoes for the kid.

To retail extra hind quarters of beef costing 16 cents:—

122 pounds hind quarter at 16 cents, cost	$19.52
Plus 25 per cent.	4.88
	$24.40
33 pounds Round Steak at 22 cents	$7.26
39 pounds Loin Steak at 30 cents	11.70
15 pounds Rump Roast at 18 cents	2.70
7 pounds Back Round at 20 cents	1.40
10 pounds Shank at 4 cents	.40
10 pounds Flank and Cod at 8 cents	.80
5 pounds Suet at 10 cents	.50
3 pounds Waste	....
122 pounds bringing	$24.76

These tables are for extra hinds and not by carcass.

Extra front quarter of beef costing 6 cents:—

128 pounds front quarter at 12 cents, cost	$22.36
Plus 25 per cent.	3.84
	$19.20
29 pounds Rib at 22 cents	$6.38
27 pounds Plate at 10 cents	2.70
56 pounds Chuck at 16 cents	8.96
5 pounds Neck at 10 cents	.50
8 pounds Shank at 4 cents	.32
3 pounds Waste	....
128 pounds bringing	$18.86

Note I have allowed for a small neck on all tables. Most butchers cut them larger than necessary. This good lean beef when you cannot sell it in boneless stews and boils will bring you much more per pound in Hamburger steak, chili meat and mixed sausage or bologna. You must think of your sausage mill before you sell a piece of good meat at a bargain.

When you handle front quarters that cost 12 cents it is out of high class beef—usually No. 1 native stuff. Your center cuts of rib roast should readily bring 22 cents per pound, the navel end of your plate 20 cents, and your best shoulder cuts 30 cents. It is not always necessary to sell for as low a margin as 25 per cent., even in this high priced beef. It costs lots of successful butchers 20 per cent. on the money received to do business, and few of them less than 15 per cent. Don't think that because your competitor is selling at a loss that you must too, for if he does he hurts himself worse than he does you; more yet, he won't be a competitor long if he keeps this up, for he can't pay his bills, let alone yours. Cutting prices to where a butcher cannot make a decent profit is one of the most foolish things we have to contend with. If butchers were better educated as to what they should get for their stuff, and organized just a little, we would have very little trouble in this way.

To find your actual cost on any or all of your separate cuts of beef, deduct 20 per cent. from your selling price and it will give the same. You will notice that I figure the shanks of beef very low, allowing only a small sum for the 36 pounds in a carcass of beef, when in fact there is from 11 to 15 pounds of good lean meat on them if you will trim them out, and you will find they will bring much more in hamburger, mixed sausage, bologna, and in many other ways. Sell your meat by the pound—that's what we have scales for. This stops the soup bone fiend, who expects and often gets 20 cents worth of lean beef on a 10-cent soup bone. This will also make up for the rump soup bone where you have to take it out of your roast and other little trimmings where beef is handled slow.

The Attack on Premiums Up-to-Date.

How the Recent United States Supreme Court Decisions Have Been Used by the States to Support Campaigns of Their Own. No Headway Has Apparently Been Made as Yet.

From erroneous references in some newspapers and trade journals to a decision made some time ago by the Supreme Court of the United States, bearing upon the Florida and Washington State laws taxing premium enterprises, many have obtained a wrong impression of its real import. The Supreme Court decision was, in effect, simply that the passage of such laws was not contrary to the United States Constitution, leaving the matter just where it has always rested—a question for the State Courts to determine—the Legislatures being under the restrictions and limitations of their State Constitutions.

The courts of more than a score of States have held that premium advertising has the same standing as any other form of advertising and cannot be prohibited or restricted.

The Florida law was repealed by the last Legislature of that State after the unwarrantable features of the measure were recognized. There is also every indication that the Washington law will amended or repealed, at least i much as it applies to manufac ers' coupons. In fact, since enactment even the trading st and coupon companies (at whic was chiefly aimed) have contin to do business "at the same stand" with but a slight chang their methods.

Only recently Governor Mc of Massachusetts, advised the L islature of that State, upon the vice of the Attorney-General, th bill of this character would vio the Constitution of Massachus

Since the United States Supr Court rendered the decision question, bills attacking prem advertising have been introdu in every Legislature in session ing the present year. New Y Massachusetts, Louisiana, Geor Rhode Island, Tennessee, Kentu and many other States have year reaffirmed the position viously taken, namely, that premi advertising is as sound and leg mate as any other form of tr promotion.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market is active and business is much better than it was a few weeks ago. There is nothing very cheap about. Here and there sellers are making slight concessions on large orders, but the market is steady to firm without any material change from a week ago.

Coffee.

The coffee market, speaking particularly of Rio and Santos, is slightly weaker than it was last week, and it is possible to buy a shade cheaper. Demand is poor, buyers not being satisfied as to the safety of the present market. Milds are still dull and inclined to be weak. Mild coffees are extremely cheap at the present writing, in fact you can buy some grades of Central American coffees as low as a good Santos costs. Java and Mocha unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

The sugar market still shows a tendency to advance. All refiners are now on the basis of 7 cents for granulated, and raw sugar is now quoted at 6.02. The present high prices of sugar are undoubtedly only temporary, although they will probably be maintained for some time to come. The coming Cuba crop is 400,000 tons more than last year's crop, which is 400,000 greater than the year before. Cuban planters are straining every nerve to produce some sugar. In fact most of the producing sections, except those of Europe, are doing this and it is expected that the coming world's crop will be only 750,000 tons less than the crop of 1914, before the war started. Beet granulated is not cutting any figure as yet, as the growers do not seem to be ready to sell. None has been offered for the extreme Eastern territory as yet, and it may be that none will be, as the producers can sell their granulated to better advantage in the West than in the East. The consumptive demand for granulated sugar is fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose shows no change for the week, but confectioners' glucose is temporarily out of the market. The situation is very firm. Compound syrup is high and is still in light demand. Sugar syrup is still very much above normal, but is in light request. New cane juice molasses is being offered at about 10 cents above normal. Advices from New Orleans are that the supply of first molasses will be very much reduced this year because of the desire of the planters to get all the sugar out of their molasses that they can. This will reduce the quality of the molasses remaining and already some grades, which ordinarily would not bring more than 13 cents, are being freely quoted and bought at 28 cents.

Fish.

The mackerel situation is about unchanged. The domestic catch is not looking quite as good as it did and prices are still very firm, though no higher for the week. Irish mackerel remains unchanged, and the Norway situation is quite unchanged. Even if the embargo on the exportation of Norway mackerel is lifted, there will be few at the moment to come for very few have been salted. Cod is very high, and so are hake and haddock, as has previously been reported. Demand is fair. Salmon shows no change. All grades are steady to firm on a high basis. Demand fair. Domestic sardines are very scarce and high and are ruling now at $3.15 in a large way. Imported sardines show no change whatever.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are showing considerable excitement. Sales have been made during the week as high as $1.10 to $1.15. Jobbers are paying these prices and so are the large packers of tomato products. There does not seem to be any real reason for these rates. Last year the pack was only 8,000,000 cases, with a 3,000,000 carry-over, making a total available of 11,000,000. This year it seems to be agreed that if the pack were to stop now it would show from twelve to thirteen million. It has not stopped, however, and there might easily be another million packed. Last year, under the influence of the short pack, prices got to $1.05 in a large way, but people stopped buying and the price had to decline. Whether the same thing will happen with the present price remains to be seen. If the pack is even 12,000,000, $1.10 or even $1 is too high. Corn is also very high on account of scarcity. Southern Maine style corn has passed the $1 mark, which gets it about 50 per cent. above normal. Shoepeg corn is quoted at $1.25, against a normal price of not more than 80 cents. New York deliveries will be nominal and the average Maine delivery will not be over 50 per cent. Corn is sure to be exceedingly high during the entire season. Peas are still firm and high, but unchanged for the week. Apples are dull at ruling quotations. California canned goods show no change. Moderate demand. Small Eastern staple canned goods are still very scarce and very high. Sauer kraut has reached the dollar mark, and canned pumpkin and Southern string beans are both about 50 per cent. above normal.

Dried Fruits.

Dried fruits show no change for the week. Prunes, raisins and currants are the firmest lines, all being above normal in price and firm, with, however, a light demand.

Butter.

The butter market is very active for all grades, at an advance of 1 cent per pound. Consumptive demand is good and considerable butter is being shipped abroad. The quality arriving is up to the standard for the season, and the market is healthy. Butter is ruling about 6 to 7 cents above last year.

Eggs.

The market for fresh eggs is very firm at an advance of 1 to 2 cents per dozen. The consumptive demand is very good and the supply is about normal. The quality of the present receipts is very fine and the market is strong and healthy at 5 to 6 cents above last year.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm and in very good demand for export as well as for home use. The make is a little lighter than usual and the situation is firm. If there is any change, there will probably be a slight advance. Cheese is about 5 cents above normal.

Beans and Peas.

The market for pea beans, both on spot and for future delivery, remains unchanged. Prices are high, with a strong undertone. Marrows are unchanged for the week; fair demand. California limas also about unchanged, with demand. New green peas offered at $3.85 per bushel large way. This is about 30 above the spot price and cons ably above the average for the several seasons.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats steady, with unchanged prices a fair consumptive demand. and compound lard are uncha and active. Barreled pork is at ruling quotations and dried is firm at an advance of 1 Canned meats are firm and changed. Provisions are from to 2 cents above normal; pure compound lard about 3 above; barreled pork about above; dried beef about 5 above; canned meats about 20 cent. above.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

We have a much stronger ma here on evaporated apples. The mand has been from all directions there is such a demand for fresh a that the evaporators are making headway in getting started.

The market for the past week been of an improving tendency. slow arrivals of new stock have gre interfered with the distribution, but trade are evidently becoming satisf that prices for good to fancy grades Honduras are on a safe basis for eration, and are filing their orders delivery as soon as possible. Jap while not entirely neglected, is not tracting any special attention, as it felt that prices must fall away a c siderable item before it can be regar as a prominent factor in the mar movement. Imported Fish Specialties.

Herrings of all kinds are selling very well indeed, and prices, while not any higher than those quoted last week, are certainly very strong and tending higher; in fact, some particularly fine lots of herrings have changed hands at higher prices. Holland herrings are being offered for shipment at rather reasonable prices, but so far no interest has developed as importers expect rather low prices for Holland herrings this season, owing to the arrangement which England has made with Holland, giving them a certain rebate on all herrings exported to the United States. So far no offers have been received of new Norway herrings. It seems that all that has been caught so far has been used for local consumption.

Imported sardines continue in really good demand and prices are very firm. The catch in France is practically nil, in fact, no fish that is suitable for the United States trade has been caught lately, and exorbitant prices have been paid for the few lots which have arrived here, which make French sardines prices.—Coffee dull, with prices fairly steady.—Sugar fractionally higher for the week; raws selling at 6.02 and granulated at 7 cents. Immediate future is high.—Canned goods in heavy demand. Tomatoes quoted at $1.10, situation very strong, although the pack is going steadily forward. Corn very scarce and very high. Rumors of sales of Maryland Maine style corn at $1.15. California asparagus pack very heavy this year. Canned fish all high and firm, especially salmon and domestic sardines. Canned fruits fairly active and unchanged. —Raisins firmer on account of crop damage. Balance of the dried fruit line quiet but firm.—Wheat higher on account of export buying.—Flour shows a further advance of 10 cents per barrel during the week. —Provisions still very high and very much above normal.

Straight Talk to Clerks.

The Whole Secret of Selling Goods at Retail Is Right Here. Sales Not Made When They Could Be Made Defraud You.

When you go into a store and a salesperson asks, "Do you wish anything?" doesn't it at once strike you that it comes very close to being a "foolish question"?

Why should you be in that store if not to buy something?

True, people go into stores with the full intention of "just looking" —and they are to be made welcome and assisted in every unobtrusive way, and not made to feel that they are a trouble.

But the mere fact that they are in the store shows that they are after something; so, let your greeting assume that they want to get it now by saying, "What can I show you?" or something similar in form; and, if possible, change a "looker" into a customer—because we may have exactly what she has in mind.

Do it tactfully—oh, that word tact could be a text for a volume! But the best "boiling down" of the volume is defining tact as doing to others as you would be done by—treating a customer as you would like to be treated in courtesy, consideration, attention and in intelligent and helpful service. You owe it to her, to the store, and to yourself.

Did it ever occur to you that you are defrauding yourself when you lose a customer—or don't sell all you might have—because of lax attention and inferior service? This affects your sales record and your sales record is the gauge of your efficiency, and inefficiency spells loss of a job. Think it over.

Madam.

"Where's the madam?" I said to a customer of mine the other day. The madam is his wife. I'd always seen her in the store, hustling about and doing her little stunt, just as if she was on regular wages. Good jolly little soul. Not a lazy bone in her body. I like her and I always looked forward to a little chin with her.

"The madam ain't coming down any more," he said.

"Why not? She ain't sick, is she?"

"No, she ain't sick; she's all right. But we thought she'd better not come."

He looked so blamed funny when he said it, that I couldn't drop it.

"I'm sorry for that," I said. "I like to see her and talk to her. Nothing wrong is there, old man?"

He sort of grinned. "Come back," he said, and we went back to his little cubby hole.

"The truth is," he said, "the madam was too generous with the customers. I got on to it last week, and after that I sort of watched. Why everybody was simply pushing her along for a good thing. I didn't make a cent on anything she had to weigh or measure out. Jerusalem, it was fearful!

"You see," he said, "she's got a heart as big as her body, and these women could jolly her into giving 'em about twice as much as they ought to have. Why she measured out a quarter of a peck of tomatoes one day and before it left the store to be delivered I turned it out and measured it. It was a full third—mighty near a half. They simply jollied her into piling it up and piling it up, and there wasn't a cent in it.

"Same with everything. If she weighed out a pound of coffee they would talk to her about how hard it was to get along with things so high, and she'd dump in several ounces over. She couldn't help it—that's the way she's built. She'd give away the coat off her back."

"What did you do?" I asked.

"I talked to her about it. She didn't know she was doing it. I told her everybody that came into the store was holding off for her to wait on 'em and it got so after a while she was worse rushed than anybody else in the place. She said she thought we ought to give good measure. I told her about the quarter of a peck of tomatoes, and then she saw it and said she'd be more careful.

"She was, the next day too, but she got me in wrong by telling everybody that I'd called her down for giving too much. That made 'em sore, and in three days she was back just where she was before. She couldn't stand up against 'em—they could put it all over her. So I talked it over with her and we decided she'd best stay at home. Sorry, too, she was a big help."

D'ye know, it's a funny thing about women that way? There ain't any middle ground with 'em at all. Either they do the way madam did, or they're as mean as poison and won't give even a grain over. I've got another customer whose wife darned near queered his business, just by snooping around to see that nobody gave big measure. Everybody hated her and nobody would let her wait on 'em if they could help it. In the end the store began to lose trade and she had to stay out, too. In that case she and her husband had a row about it and pretty near come to quits.

You won't often find a woman that can see the store's side of it and the customer's side too. That is, not if she's married to the boss. If it's her store, seems like she's all right. I suppose she sees she's got to be if she's to hold her business and so she goes ahead and does it.

If a man's wife's going to help in the store, I like to see her take care of the books. If she's cut out for that, that's the best place for her. She can't get in wrong and she can't put the store in wrong. Ain't that right?

By reason of the industrial activity in our county business just now in our line is very good. Munition plants in connection with the Bethlehem Steel Co. stretch for four miles towards Easton from Bethlehem. They are employing a large number of extra hands; the iron industry is running full and the slate and cement industries are employing a large number of men. In fact, it is difficult to secure men to get work done. All this has helped trade and we believe that the movement of business in our line in the months of August and September is as large as it has ever been with the exception of 1914.

Kellogg Toasted Corn Flake Co. Wins Controversy Over Kellogg Name.

The Kellogg Toasted Corn Flake Co. was advised during the week that it is entitled to register as a trade-mark for its prepared foods the word "Kellogg's" in script, through a decision of the examiner of the patent office at Washington, D. C. The decision also states that the Kellogg Food Co. and Dr. J. H. Kellogg "have lost to the Kellogg Toasted Corn Flake Co. any right which either of them may have had to the name 'Kellogg' or 'Kellogg's' in connection with flaked cereal foods, or in connection with the broader business" of the manufacture of prepared cereal foods. The decision is upon an interference filed by the Kellogg Food Co. and Dr. Kellogg in August, to prevent the Kellogg Toasted Corn Flake Co. from registering the word "Kellogg's" as a trade-mark for its products. Among the reasons for the decision, according to the examiner, are that the doctor sold the corn flake business to the other party in the suit for a considerable amount of money and stock, and that in a suit between the contenders some years ago, a settlement was made for a large sum with the agreement that Dr. Kellogg and the Kellogg Food Co. would stop the use of the word "Kellogg" upon certain types of prepared foods.

No. 384.—When You Start to Protect Yourself, Be Sure You Are Right Before You Go Ahead.

A case just decided, the report of which lies on my table, shows how business men who think they are protecting themselves at every point, often do the very thing that gets them into difficulty, and makes it certain that they won't get out without having to pay something.

In various articles I have pointed out the duty of a buyer when his goods arrive. He has the right of reasonable inspection, in order to see whether they have sent him what he bought. When the reasonable inspection period is over he must act, and his action must be specific and decisive. He must either accept the goods or reject them, and usually he cannot accept part and reject part. He must in many cases act on the consignment as a whole. And if he fails to do anything, he will be held to have accepted the whole consignment whether he intended to do so or not.

Now having refreshed the memories of the readers hereof with the above, let me pass to the case referred to in the first paragraph. It was a Connecticut case and the decision before me was rendered by the Supreme Court of that State. Nevertheless, it represents the law of the entire United States.

A man named Graves, who appears to have been an ice cream manufacturer, ordered from a machine company an outfit for making ice cream. It consisted of freezers, brine tanks and pump, all being part of the complete apparatus. The stuff was delivered and about the middle of July the buyer concluded that the freezers were not satisfactorily and discarded them, giving the machine company notice to that effect. But he continued to use the balance of the apparatus, viz., the brine tanks and pump, until some time in the fall, the machine company meanwhile steadily demanding payment for the whole thing. Finally Graves definitely rejected the entire apparatus and the machine company promptly sued him. The court gave judgment against him for the entire amount. The following from the decision is really the kernel of the law in all such cases:—

> The contract is on its face entire, and the parties have so treated it in their correspondence, and on their briefs. It follows that the defendant had the right to reject the whole apparatus upon finding the freezers unsatisfactory. But he had no right to accept one part and reject the rest, for that would impose a new contract on the vendor. He also had the right to test the machinery by using it for so long as was reasonably necessary in order to find out whether it was satisfactory or not. The unsatisfactory operation of the freezers was ascertained about the middle of July, when they were discarded and not thereafter used. Nevertheless, the defendant continued to use the brine tank and pump, which were capable of use with other freezers. The defendant attempts to reconcile this continued use with the subsequent rejection of the whole apparatus, on the ground that the brine tank and pump were mere accessories and were used several months with old freezers on the assumption that the plaintiff would eventually cause the new freezers to operate satisfactorily. Neither of these claims of fact is supported by the finding. The pump and tank were parts of the complete apparatus contracted for, and it does not appear that they were relatively unimportant in function or cost. Nor does it appear that either the plaintiff or the defendant expected to make any additional attempt to cause the freezers to operate satisfactorily after the middle of July. On the contrary, the findings and the correspondence up to the defendant's final letter of rejection show that the plaintiff claimed to have fully performed its contract, and on that ground made repeated demands for payment, beginning September 1st, and that the defendant claimed that the machinery had been laid aside and was not in use.

In other words, the man who buys must either fish or cut bait. He cannot play fast and loose. The seller has some rights which must be respected, and one of them is the right to know whether he has made a sale or not.

Now what should Graves have done to protect himself here? Let me say first that a contract for the various parts of a complete apparatus is an entire contract, which means a contract that is not treated as performed at all until all of it is performed. In other words the machine company could not—if it had contracted to deliver the whole apparatus—have delivered the freezers and nothing more, and claimed to be paid for them. The court would invariably say: "You haven't performed your contract and you can collect nothing until you do." Therefore this whole contract of Graves's had to stand together.

Graves could try the apparatus out thoroughly. If it or any part of it did not work properly, he could reject it, but he would have to reject it all. He could not keep a part only. If he tried to reject a part, but kept the balance, his rejection would be treated as no rejection at all, and he would be in no better position than if he hadn't done it. Somebody evidently told Graves this, for after using the brine tanks and pump for several months he finally woke up and rejected the whole thing. But that was too late, because a buyer would never be given several months to examine and test out a purchase. So in the end, perhaps with a perfectly good case against the freezer part of his purchase, he nevertheless had to pay for the whole thing.

All contracts are not entire contracts, and some of them can be separated and part kept and the balance rejected. For instance, suppose you order from your jobber five cases of Mignon brand of corn, and ten cases of Roman brand of peas. He sends the Mignon corn but sends Russian peas instead of Roman. You can take in the and send back the peas, because is what the law calls a sev contract, i. e., the parts can be rated and each stand on its feet.

Are You Keeping Your Cheese in a Cabinet?

In these days of sanitary storekeeping every dealer should be using an Automatic Cheese Cabinet. It is not only a classy fixture and a trade builder, but it is a convenience to the dealer.

The Automatic Cheese Cabinet is so constructed that when you open the door, by lowering it, the cheese is automatically drawn out, and when you close the door the cheese is returned to the cabinet.

Just now the American Specialty Mfg. Co., of Chambersburg, Pa., have a special deal on, by which they equip the front with French plate bevel glass at the regular price. You'll be sorry if you don't own one within the next thirty days.

Selling Talks With Clerks

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

He's a Good Salesman."—That's a reputation to have. Many a cus- er that talks and puts off and shops nd will talk about you as a "good man." She admires your interest your ability—and she'll give you a ce to sell her. A good salesman, must always remember, is highly ected by a customer. Why? People buy canned tomatoes at very height of the tomato season, let e the tail end of it. Show up the line in your window, making a en and a half dozen price on each .

To the Butter Man.—If you sell print butterine let the people know it. Open up five or six of the original cases and pile the cases up to your counter. Signs something like the following would certainly help your sales: "Freshly Made Butterine, 28 Cents Print." "Pure Butterine, 25 Cents Print." "Sweet Butterine for Perfect Cooking." "Pure Butterine Is Good on Pancakes." "Don't Use Poor Butter—Use Wholesome Butterine." Now that the price of butter, especially firsts, is getting out of reach of working people makes butterine selling easy and gives you a good, fair profit.

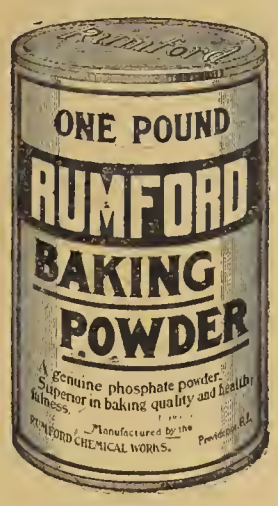
Selling Syrup.—You come in contact with people who insist on buying pure maple syrup, paying 50 cents a quart for it, and many of them can "ill" afford the price. It's merely a matter of flavor—and sometimes not that. To be sure, pure maple syrup is a most delicious thing, and we don't mean you to infer that the sale of it should be discouraged when selling to people of means. But it is your duty in handling the middle class trade to show up and talk up a 25-cent syrup of maple flavor, which formula shows a percentage of corn syrup.



The introduction of corn syrup brought a good, clean, wholesome article on the table of thousands of people at a time when sugar syrup was selling for 25 cents, No. 2 tin. There's a lot of foolish talk about this pure food business and the public in many cases misconstrues the term "compound."

Dear Sir:—I am inclosing copy of our latest circular for your inspection. I have tried to carry out some of your suggestions on the last one I sent you. Any criticism or suggestions for improvement will be greatly appreciated.

Yours truly,
E. M. CHAMBON.

Mr. Chambon is getting out a very good-looking 4-page circular 6 x 9 inches, but I think he has put rather too much stuff on it. The outside is printed as a private mailing card but still has advertising matter on, and in fact all four pages are filled pretty full. On the last page appear "Six Special Bargains." They are canned milks, Beech-Nut beans and catsup, Campbell soups, fruit jars and tin cans, corn and peas, Shredded Wheat biscuit. The paper and the printing are good and the circular presents a good and impressive appearance.

I say without reservation that this is good advertising in my judgment. I should confidently expect it to get results, and if the paper, with this sort of advertising in it, is issued regularly as I suppose it is, I should expect it to do the work of a salesman, making traceable sales. There is one point in w Mr. Chambon can improve his vertising, and that is in his h ings. Instead of a tame head "Macaroni and Spaghetti," I sh use a sprightlier head somet like "Try a Dish of Macar The heads help immensely to advertising bright and spark and they can do a lot to mak tame. Still, I say again this is clean, well-written advertising as it is.

Norway Mackerel is Coming to Somebody, Anyway.

New York, October 5, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—As we are subscribers to your valuable paper, the writer begs to advise in looking over your edition of October 2d, there is an article stating there is an embargo on Norway mackerel.

We wish to state that within the past three weeks we have imported one thousand barrels of mackerel from Norway of last year's catch. The writer, Mr. J. H. Mulrain, has been in Norway for three months and has secured a lot of thirty-six hundred barrels of Norway mackerel, which he had the permission to ship out of Norway this year.

It is quite true that the wegian government has plac embargo on the 1916 catch, a are using same for home cons tion. In fact there has been a large catch, but 25 per cent. mackerel has been salted dow home consumption.

Will further state that the ity of the mackerel we recei exceptionally fine, and we h difficulty in disposing of the sand barrels of mackerel w ceived on the two shipments arrived recently.

We expect a further shipm five hundred barrels on the s ship "Bergensfjord," which Norway October 9th. The de throughout the United State been exceptionally strong on way mackerel on account o scarcity of same.

Trusting the above inform will be of some service to your able paper, we beg to remain,
Yours very truly,

A Suggestion.

————, N. Y., Sept. 27, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—That I am one of your subscribers you surely know. I had a grocery store at the above address and made my expenses until a year ago, but since the A. and P. came next door to me I hardly covered my expenses.

I have four brothers who are in the ice cream business. They have three stores. I mean three have two stores and one brother has one store, and they are all making out well. Not only do they cover expenses, but they are also saving money. As I was not in a very good financial condition one brother who has the one store is opening for me an ice cream store in the same store where I had the grocery store. I own the building and the location is very good and also the block. My next competitor is quite a distance away on either side of me, so I hope, and the way it looks, I will surely do well.

I gave up my grocery store on the 15th of August, paid every one to whom I owed any bills up to the last cent, and since that time I have been working in my brother's place. I picked up a good deal. I know perfectly how to wait on people. I know pretty well how to make ice cream and all our candy we also make ourselves. All our goods are the best and the highest grade—candy and also ice cream. Our store is fixed up very up-to-date. The alteration in the building and the fixtures and the machinery cost us $6,000. Our store will be the swell of the town, but in prices we can undersell any one in our neighborhood and also give better goods,

Yours, H.

We publish this man's experience because it may convey a thought to some other hard-pressed member of the family. Certainly there are no chains of ice cream stores as yet.

AMONG THE TRADE.

At its last meeting on Monday night, the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association adopted resolutions calling on the large bakers to retain the 5-cent loaf of bread if possible, even if they were forced to reduce its size. Copies of the resolution went to the Kolb Co., the Freihofer Co., the Moore Co. and the Jones Co.

Doesn't This Date Tell You Something?

¶ This is the date Knight's Cooking Extracts first decorated grocers' shelves. Time, skill and experience combined have added to the perfection of these goods each year. If an old lady or a child is sent for a cooking extract without being told to get a certain brand, they'll ask for Knight's by instinct. This name naturally identifies itself with flavoring extracts in their minds. It's a household word and stands for the highest standard of excellence.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can possibly sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

If a retailer asks us if he should take up all nationally advertised goods and push them all equally, because they are nationally advertised, we say no, of course not. Some advertised goods are so unprofitable they are unworthy of any retailer's attention.

But we repeat that a nationally advertised brand which, considering the work of selling, pays a satisfactory profit, is the best merchandise on earth.

Failures Are Falling Off, Excepting Grocery Failures

For Some Mysterious Reason They Continue to Increase. First Nine Months Much Under Last Year, Taking All Failures Together, But Grocery Failures Show Increase Both in Third Quarter and in September.

The official report of commercial failures for the first nine months of 1916 has been received, and shows a remarkable falling off in all lines as compared with the same period of 1915. In the first nine months of 1915, the number of failures was 17,288, against 13,250 during the first nine months of 1916. There was a corresponding falling off in the liabilities.

Below is the table, showing the failures in both periods in all lines:

Equally interesting are the reports for the third quarter of the year, and the report for September, both compared with last year, and both of classified failures.

The report shows 251 general store failures during the third quarter against 364 during the same quarter of 1915. A remarkable decrease. On the other hand grocery failures substantially increased—from 829 in the third quarter of 1915 to 905 in the third quarter of 1916. Other lines, clothing, dry goods, shoes and hardware, all fell off decidedly in the same period, the grocery line being the only line, outside of hotels and paints that showed an increase.

Precisely the same thing is shown in the report for September. Almost every line but the grocery business showed a decided falling off in failures for September. The figures follow:—

General Stores—September, 1916, 84; liabilities, $531,227; September, 1915, 125; liabilities, $822,255.

Grocery Stores—September, 1916, 283; liabilities, $961,562; September, 1915, 247; liabilities, $1,265,716.

Dry Goods—September, 1916, 35; liabilities, $410,910; September, 1916, 65; liabilities, $507,565.

Shoes—September, 1916, 31; liabilities, $209,303; September, 1915, 33; liabilities, $231,331.

Hardware—September, 1916, 22; liabilities, $163,108; September, 1915, 43; liabilities, $361,395.

The Potato Situation is Critical

Our Own Crop is Seriously Short and the Government's Quarantine, Which Some Say is Political, Prevents Us From Getting Potatoes Abroad. Prices Breaking All Records and May Go Higher.

The potato situation is becoming critical. Not only is our own crop decidedly short, but we are being prevented by the Government quarantine from getting supplies of foreign potatoes to piece out our insufficient home supply. Prices are breaking all records.

According to the Government reports, this year's potato crop is only 318,000,000 bushels. Last year it was 359,000,000 and in 1914 it was 400,000,000. This shortage would not ordinarily be serious, because we could get potatoes from abroad. The Government, however, has placed a quarantine on potatoes from almost all the chief producing countries, and consumers are beginning to charge that politics, manipulated by the American holder of potatoes, is responsible for it.

This year's shortage in domestic potatoes occurs chiefly in sections from which we obtain our supplies for the winter. Since the last Government report, giving a total crop estimate for the entire country of 318,000,000 bushels from all sections for this year, severe frosts have occurred in these producing sections, killing the vines and stopping any further growth, and there is every possibility of a still further shrinkage.

We are now experiencing the highest prices at this particular time of the year ever known. Farmers are selling potatoes now at loading stations at from $1 to $1.15 a bushel, which would make them cost in carlots landed in New York or Philadelphia around $3.75 per bag of 165 pounds, whereas in other years prices would rule around $1.75. At this time of the year we usually have our lowest prices, inasmuch as farmers are harvesting and turning into market such stocks as they are unable to store for the winter, and it is quite evident as the winter advances we are likely to have a $6 wholesale market for sacks of 165 pounds, as the additional expenses of storage, shrinkage, insurance, interest, etc., will be incurred when stored.

The only apparent source of relief is obtainable by admitting foreign potatoes into this country, especially from Great Britain and Ireland, and particularly Ireland, which latter country has a very good crop as to quality and q tity. However, supplies are permissible from this source, o to the present potato quara which has been placed against ments from all European coun excepting in a few rare instanc small producing sections or from which shipment is almos possible.

It is quite evident that the antine act originated from the ducer, whose representative Congress saw to it that the ac rushed through as a rider o tariff bill at that time. How it was put into operation only the present administration re the tariff along most all line potatoes were put on the fre evidently to meet the popular cal cry at that time of reducin high cost of living. Immed after they were placed on the list the Federal Horticu Board, a branch of the Depar of Agriculture, to whom suc thority was given, placed a qu tine against all foreign pot excepting Bermuda and a few tries which were not likely to any shipment.

This quarantine is claimed put in force on the ground foreign potatoes are diseased have certain diseases existin producing localities, and strange to say that these very ties against which this quara is effective produce more po to the acre than we can in ou and most prolific producing tions. If these so-called di do exist, it has certainly no on the quantity and, in fact, q of the foreign potatoes as sta prove. It seems rather an that these so-called diseases overlooked so long as we had tective tariff of 25 cents a on potatoes, but immediately tariff was eliminated the dise these foreign countries appea

WITH THE EDITOR

Many an unconscious joke is perpetrated in the name of resolutions adopted at an association meeting. To-day the average such resolution is almost meaningless. It is even more meaningless, if that is possible, than a political platform. But all resolutions are not quite as remarkable as that adopted last week by the Toledo (Ohio) Retail Grocers' Association, stating that the association is "opposed to the reckless driving of automobiles!"

Some Resolution!

I respectfully and harmlessly suggest that if the Toledo Association wishes to allow itself such latitude as this in the passing of resolutions, that the following might be worth passing:—

A resolution against the committing of murder on Fridays.

A resolution against any retail grocer giving 20 ounces to the pound.

A resolution against stealing from merchants who have been in business more than five years.

A resolution against employing clerks more than 90 years old.

I feel myself perfectly competent to frame resolutions as long as the Toledo Association will pass them. And I agree, speaking now of the automobile resolution, that it was a good thing to pass if the people of Toledo believed the members of the association were in favor of reckless driving.

If the Washington administration are allowing politics or favoritism of any sort to influence the quarantine they have put on foreign potatoes, they ought to be led out and hung, one by one. It seems incredible that they would do anything that would so directly grind the faces of the poor, but the large handlers of potatoes are becoming highly suspicious.

Politics and Potatoes.

There is much to support their suspicion, too. Our own potato crop is 41,000,000 bushels less than last year and 82,000,000 less than in 1914. That alone wouldn't amount to much, for we could import all the potatoes we needed to fill out. But this the Government prevents us from doing by its quarantine against the potatoes of all the large producing countries. Is that quarantine done in the interest of the domestic potato producer, so as to enable him to make a lot of extra money? That is the point. I repeat that it seems incredible, but look at the facts. Foreign potatoes formerly paid a duty of 25 cents a bushel. The present administration, perhaps to make political capital, had potatoes put on the free list, of course against the protest of the farming element. Very shortly afterward, perhaps to placate the farming element, the Government issued its quarantine, specifying the very potatoes which were freely accepted as long as they paid a duty. The result is that we are being badly pinched. Potatoes have never before been as high as they are now. They are peculiarly the food of the poor, and anything that puts them where they are now is a hardship on millions of people who oughtn't to have to stand it.

Politics has been responsible for just as slimy tricks before, but there ought to be some hangings if politics is responsible for this.

When Legislatures began to pass laws against dishonest advertising, particularly against exaggeration as to what a given piece of merchandise was "worth," I suggested that in many cases it was going to be difficult to prove what a "former" or "real" value was, value being in some degree a matter of opinion. But I said that it would be possible, and outlined a way to do it.

Defenses in Prosecutions Under Advertising Laws.

Courts in States which have advertising laws are following that plan now. Witness the District of Columbia case briefly reported in aother column. A dealer sold for $4.85 a Palm Beach suit represented to be worth $12. Witnesses familiar with palm beach suits said it was not worth more than $5, and the lying dealer was convicted.

The point is that experts in any line can examine an article with whose class they are familiar, and fix its fair wholesale and retail value within certain variations. The defense "I thought it was worth that much" has never prevailed against this kind of evidence, so far as I have seen.

Two members of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association have sent in to the secretary their views on various trade subjects. One tells what he considers the gravest problems affecting the wholesale grocer to-day:—

Two Views of Trade Problems.

Promptness in paying bills and taking discounts.
Co-operation—getting together on mutual interests.
Advantages of association work.
Tricky practices—cost of goods—overhead expenses.
Subsidizing salesmen.
Sacredness of contracts.

The other tells what he thinks the National Association should emphasize in its work:—

1. Education of the retail grocer to the use of a simple, uniform system of bookkeeping.
2. Simple, uniform cost system.
3. Absolute necessity of carrying insurance.
4. Absolute necessity of making uniform, signed financial statements to creditors.
5. Importance to merchants, who do discount bills, of insisting that no discounts be allowed after the proper discount period has elapsed.

Note that both men emphasize the need of preserving business honor—the prompt payment of obligations, the taking of discounts only when they are due, the scrupulous keeping of contracts, and so on. Everything said applies to the retailer just as much as to the jobber.

Touching the recent 8-hour law incident, a local manufacturer indulged in some interesting reflections during the week:—

Isn't This True?

"They say President Wilson was a coward in forcing Congress to pass a law increasing the wages of the railroad men," he said, "but the people that say that have probably never actually gone through a strike. They may have looked at a strike from a safe distance, but I have gone through one, and I'll give in every time, even to an unreasonable demand, before I'll precipitate another. We had a little strike down here not long ago. It only lasted forty-eight hours, but it cost us $500, and upset our business entirely. Then we gave in. thought we were right, and we think so, but all the same we g in simply because we couldn't st what we would have had to st had we not given in.

"Why, just before the eight-h law was passed, before there any strike at all, just because was expected, things began to l pen, and we received fifty or si complaints from our custom Goods gone astray or delayed. railroads threw them into any car and shipped them out regardl One man less than a hundred m from Philadelphia didn't get go shipped from Philadelphia for days. What would have happe if there had really been a stri I can hardly imagine. It w have been happening to every sh per and receiver in the Un States, too. President Wilson right, and everybody interested i railroad strike agrees with him. can't hold our trade simply by ing 'we have a strike and are layed.' The customer doesn't c a rap about that. He wants goods and he blames it on us if doesn't get them. He isn't in ested in our troubles at all."

There is a lot of truth and in this. Admit for the sake o argument that it was cow to yield to the railroad men's un Cowardice is sometimes, fro practical standpoint, the better of discretion. When you are against an antagonist much powerful than yourself, who is ing an unreasonable demand you, but who can enforce tha mand by doing all sorts of th much worse than the demand, ing in is pretty nearly the t to do, isn't it?

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

our Goods versus Economy Goods.

hile you may not have the whip , you have, if rightly used, a very tive hand in your distinctive line of s as compared to the Economy line. one is essentially staples. The is complete. The one appeals to living. The other to both plain super-plain. The one is limited in ty. The other is practically un- ed.

is clearly evident then that the s for you to display and talk are eliminated from the Economy A study of these is a simple r.

e don't say, of course, that staples ld be ignored or even given a com- background, but your "unusual" s should be featured.

t only that, but a complete list ld be printed and distributed as a minder."

ere is no need for you to worry the Economy store if your service od. And service, mind you, means than delivery. Personal attention real courtesy and fifty other attentive turns are all embraced in the word "service."

Not long since the writer stood around in a "city grocery" and the indifference and lack of cordiality displayed was pitiable, even painful. That's the kind of store should dread the advent of the Economy plan, provided they are susceptible to dread.

Business Manners.—Roughness is never pleasing. Neither is abruptness. There are clerks who consider it smart to cut out parlor manners in business. Never! Back of the counter is where good manners count. Every effort to please leaves it's impression. Every polite action shows deference to the customer. "No, ma'am" and "Yes, sir," are simple forms of speech, but they're respectful and proper and above all, they're pleasing to the party addressed. If you wear a cap it should invariably be tipped to the woman coming up to your counter. It isn't much to do, but it's business manners. Every customer should be thanked for an order, whether the order is paid, C. O. D. or charged.

Another thing that is somewhat in line with this talk is good grammar. There is no excuse for any young man who is intelligent enough to sell goods to say "them prunes," instead of "those prunes," or "these prunes." "Isn't" is just as easily pronounced as "ain't." "Coming" sounds nicer than "comin'." These things, however small they may look to you, are noticed by people whose surroundings warrant carefulness of speech. Besides, attention to niceties of manner and speech most assuredly gain for you, personally, respect.

Canned Goods Boxes to be Higher.

Well-posted and foresighted packers are losing no time in covering their 1917 requirements in shipping cases and box shooks. It has, of course, been said for some time past that boxes would be higher in 1916. The general advance over 1916 on No. 2 and No. 3 boxes is in the neighborhood of 20 per cent. Among the principal reasons given for the advance in shipping cases are the following: Increased cost of lumber. Higher wages for labor. Higher freight rates. Another factor tending to make boxes cost the canners more next year is that the demand will be the largest ever known, because, in the first place, packers will undoubtedly make preparations for a heavy production of canned foods of all descriptions, and there will be probably 50,000,000 wooden boxes required to substitute for fibre boxes, occasioned by the advance in prices and materials used in the manufacture of fibre boxes. It is stated that fibre cases have advanced nearly 100 per cent. Large users of fibre cases are making strenuous endeavors to place contracts with makers of wooden boxes, which they plan to substitute for the paper or fibre cases. It is even declared that the big Chicago meat packers are being forced to use wooden cases in place of the fibre and that practically every meat packer at the stockyards is now doing his utmost to cover requirements on wooden cases, and that if they succeed it will make big inroads on the supply of canners' cases, resulting in higher prices to the canners when they enter the market. The large meat packers are trying to place contracts for about 20,000,000 wooden boxes for 1917, and it is not unlikely that contracts placed by them will absorb the entire productive capacity of a number of large manufacturers.

Less Cold Storage Cheese This Year.

The monthly report of the Office of Markets and Rural Organizations, Department of Agriculture, on the cold storage holdings of American cheese October 1, 1916, shows 29,487,768 pounds of cheese in 168 storages. The total holdings reported by 126 storages was 22,408,699 pounds, as compared with 23,622,367 pounds October 1, 1915, a difference of nine-tenths of 1 per cent. The report shows that the holdings increased 1.5 per cent. during September, as compared with an increase of 1.3 per cent. during September last year.

Personnel of a New Chain Store Concern, the All Pac Co. Armour & Co. Still Fighting Over Meat Cas National Wholesale Grocers' Association Neutra Bankruptcy Law Repeal. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, October 13, 1916.

Considerable interest has been manifested as to who were behind the "All Package Grocery Stores Co." the newest chain store grocery concern, which has opened several stores here and in Chicago. They also have stores in Brooklyn and Newark. All of the members of the concern seem to be men of other businesses, and not large businesses, either.

The general manager is J. B. De Beltrand. He was engaged in the retail grocery business at Chicago for several years and sold out in 1910. Shortly afterwards he organized the United Food Products Co. The company was incorporated under Arizona laws June 10, 1910. De Beltrand was given $5,000 worth of the company's capital stock for his services as organizer and promoter and a $10,000 salary as manager. It is said the company met with only ordinary success and was absorbed September 1, 1911, by the Hazel Pure Food Co. De Beltrand afterwards organized De Beltrand & Co., groceries, with headquarters on West Van Buren street, Chicago, dissolved within a short time. He entered the service of an adding machine company in the capacity of salesman. From New Haven, Conn., it is learned that he went to that place in January, 1912, and for a number of months held the office of general sales manager with an adding machine company. The former manager was C. W. Riemer, Jr., who retired several months ago. Riemer was and still is connected with the produce firm of C. W. Riemer & Co., 79 Commerce street, Newark. He is still the president of the All Package Co. Louis C. Vossmeyer, the first vice-president, is in the wholesale delicatessen business at 383 Walnut street, Newark, N. J. Charles F. Krayl, director, is engaged in the house furnishing business at 92 Hamburg Place, Newark, N. J. Claude L. Johnston, the secretary and treasurer, is secretary of Steger & Sons, piano manufacturing company, of Newark, N. J. Richard Steger, formerly a director, was succeeded a short time ago by Henry Allsopp, president of Albert E. Allsopp, Inc., and formerly of Allsopp Bros., manufacturing jewelers. John Gissinger, formerly a director, was succeeded by Frank A. La Pierre, president and treasurer of the La Pierre Mfg. Co., manufacturing jewelers of Newark, N. J.

None of the officers and backers are men of large means. Most of the present revenues of the company are coming from the sale of stock, and there seems to be no information as to whether the concern is on a profitable basis or not. It employs a large of stock salesmen.

The concern's headquarters are Woolworth Building here.

Why Gamble When You Can Safely Invest?

THERE'S room for just one tremendously powerful co-operative grocers' society in this country—the American Grocers' Society of New York and Newark. Nationally established and saving its 3,100 members right now $10 off the list on every $100 worth of staple groceries. Enabling its members to meet the fiercest chain store competition on the very staples which the chain stores cut.

Imitations of the A. G. S. have started up over night all over the country and dozens more will come along using the same co-operative plan of joining. These are doomed to failure or indifferent success. Two such imitations exploded with a loud bang in the West last month.

Even some jobbers are incorporating their business (the control of which they secretly retain) and are offering their shares to unsuspecting grocers, using cut prices as a bait to get grocers to stock the jobber's private brands. Another method of exploiting grocers is to use preferred and common stock—the preferred stock being offered to the grocer—the common stock being secretly retained by the promoters.

Now if you and other grocers permit yourself to be lured into these organizations just mushrooming up you take chances with your money, and if you lose your money you get sore and blame the whole co-operative movement. That hurts this society.

You don't have to wait for this society to grow up. It is already the largest organization of its kind in the United States. It helps you right now to starve chain store competition in your neighborhood. It fights your battles and throws a protecting arm around your store. No little organization could do these things, but this huge national society is doing them right along for its tens of hundreds of members.

Andrew Carnegie says: "Put your eggs in one basket and then watch that basket." Let every grocer put his eggs in the A. G. S. co-operative basket and "watch that basket GROW."

When you choose a bank to put your money in you choose a big strong bank backed by plenty of capital and in charge of successful men—not a little bank.

The American Grocers' Society is enjoying the most marvelous growth and prosperity. It has already increased its original capital from One Hundred Thousand Dollars to a Half Million Dollars. It has only one kind of stock—common stock, which participates in the net earnings of the A. G. S. treasury. Each share is backed by all the assets of the society. Lloyd Curtiss, the organizer and largest stockholder, owns less than 1 per cent. of the stock of the society, the remainder being owned by retail grocer stockholders in small lots.

The society is purely co-operative and is owned and controlled absolutely by its retail members.

Right now it is saving its members 10 per cent. off the list on the complete line of staple groceries—the very goods you are selling every day. Don't invest one cent in any co-operative society until you investigate the A. G. S.

Your fellow grocers have published a booklet entitled, "Quit Working for Others," and will send you a copy without charge. Write for it.

Either for ½ Cent Per Dish

Luscious Quaker Oats Flakes or Others

Nearly everywhere folks find this choice presented.

There are Quaker Oats, made of queen grains only—fragrant and flavory, immensely inviting. And there are oat foods less tempting.

Either costs ten cents per package, which is only one-half cent per dish. One is a welcome dish. Children enjoy it.

It becomes the favorite breakfast, as it should be wherever folks prize vim.

The other is considered duty food.

We urge that this dish, above all others, should be made delightful. It is the premier grain food, rich in rare elements. Housewives who serve it should insist on the finest oat flakes made.

Quaker Oats

The World-Wide Vim-Food

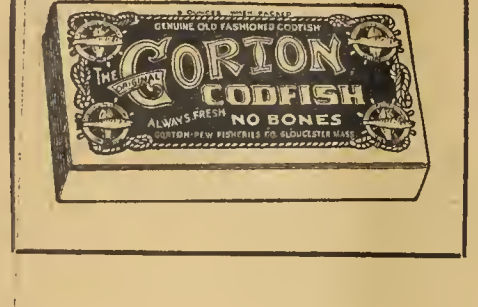
The facts are these:

Quaker Oats is the favorite brand wherever oat lovers live. It is so all the world around.

It won that place on flavor. Nowhere do people find another oat food so enticing.

The reason is this:

Quaker Oats is made of just the big, plump grains. We get but ten pounds from a bushel.



No puny grains, starved and insipid, go into this premier brand.

Please remember that. Whenever you ask for Quake Oats you get this extra grade.

And you always will.

The HOWE Is Not a Refrigerator That Eats Its Head Off

There are some beautiful refrigerators on the market that, while we call them refrigerators, are really only imitations. They are beautiful exteriors but that is all. The heart—the refrigerating principle—is lacking. They are simply good-looking boxes that eat their heads off.

The Howe Refrigerator, we believe, uses less ice than any other refrigerator made, owing to its double air lock door. The Howe double air lock door will pay you a dividend, in ice-saving, every day you use it. Write to us about it.

National Jobbers' Associations Combine to Help Educate Retailers in All Lines

Form the National Mercantile Educational Association to Standardize Retail Storekeeping Methods, Teach Advertising, Bookkeeping, Selling and Buying.

Representatives of practically all the national wholesale associations have organized what they call the "National Mercantile Educational Association," and propose to help retail merchants all over the country, in all lines, meet mail-order competition. The new association has been formed by representatives of the following national organizations:—

National Retail Dry Goods Association
National Wholesale Hardware Association
National Association of Credit Men
National Wholesale Grocers' Association
National Wholesale Shoe Association
National Retail Grocers' Association
National Wholesale Druggist Association
National Retail Hardware Association
National Retail Druggist Association
National Retail Jewelers' Association
National Wholesale Dry Goods Association
National Retail Shoe Association
Northwestern Lumbermen's Association
National Wholesale Jewelers' Association

These men met recently in Chicago and formed a temporary organization, which has just now rendered a report, a copy of which has been sent this paper. O. C. Mattern, representing the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, was the only representative of the grocery interests on the official or executive board. The president is Bentley P. Neff, of the National Wholesale Dry Goods Association.

From the report we take the following:—

> The committee was authorized to work out some plan whereby there could be co-operation among the national associations for better business methods in all lines of mercantile activity, but primarily for the benefit of the retail merchant, as his opportunity for improving conditions was less than that of the wholesalers or manufacturers, and his competition of a keener nature than theirs.
> The committee met in Chicago in September, and after careful consideration arrived at the conclusion that instead of the various national associations working independently on educational campaigns of this nature (which several of them have been doing), that there should be a co-operative clearing house through which all the work could be done. It is not the idea of the "Confederation of National Associations" or even the continuance of this "National Mercantile Educational Association," because it realizes that we have enough organizations of this nature now without starting a new one, but we would like to see some already established national association, whose interests are kindred to those of the associations represented at our conference, take on this work and serve as a clearing house for the various national mercantile associations, which would, we are sure, be very glad to co-operate. Already sixteen of them have signified their interest and we believe that taking the manufacturers in as well as wholesalers and retailers, that a hundred national associations would very quickly respond to this movement.
> What the committee wishes to see accomplished is a standardization of methods, comprising advertising, credits, bookkeeping, selling, buying, merchandising, community development and all other things entering into the life and activity of retail stores. So much is being written on these various topics that the average merchant has become confused. The time, in our opinion, has arrived for standardization and co-operation, to the end that from one source education work can be carried on systematically and bearing the indorsement of the various national mercantile associations.
> There is a great work to be accomplished, and the retail merchants throughout the country generally, in our opinion, are ready to work hand in hand in hand with any association that will take the lead for betterment of business through betterment of business methods.
> We want to see the retail merchants in the various communities of this country placed in a position to do business along lines that will give them a good, fair chance in competition, no matter what may be its source. This is a big economic question and should be of vital interest to all lines of business.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

tea market shows no quotable for the week, but the feeling er and better. There is a dis- n now to take stock in larger ies than was the case a few ago. Apparently it is impossible re any concessions from anybody od teas. The situation is very and firm.

Coffee.

coffee market is inclined to be a asier during the week, in spite submarine scare off the New d coast. The demand is light and rket inclined to be a little soft. offees are unchanged and quiet. nd Mocha unchanged.

Sugar.

sugar market has continued its course during the week. Raws old as high as 6.14 cents and ted is now quoted at 7.25 cents refiners. The rest, however, are oting 7.15 cents. The immediate is very strong and apparently s no chance of any lower prices November. At that time beet vill be in the market and prices o ease off a little, but will prob- ot ease off much until toward e of the year, when Cuban sugar in to come forward. New Cuban as been sold at about 1 cent uling spot prices and this would a decline of 1 cent in refined hich is made at that time. The ptive demand for sugar is only e.

Syrup and Molasses.

se is unchanged for the week. tuation is strong. Compound still ruling above normal, but dy seems to be expecting a good for it because of the small of fruit packed this year. Sugar nd molasses are practically out situation.

Fish.

new autumn Irish mackerel are forward and selling in a large ound $22 a barrel. This is $3 ove the average price in normal No 1916 Norway mackerel are forward, but there are some 15s now being offered. Shore l is still available at unchanged Cod, hake and haddock continue ed on the recently quoted high Demand light. Salmon is firm n. Sales have been made of red for 25 cents over the opening ort, and new pink Alaska is at 10 cents above the opening. ans $1.75, f. o. b. coast, for red and $1, f. o. b. coast, for pink. uation is very strong and high will undoubtedly continue out the season. Domestic sardines continue scarce, with an increasing advancing tendency. Imported sardines unchanged and quiet. Prices still very high. There is a tendency to advance Norway sardines still further.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are still on the rampage and sales of Maryland 3s, in a large way, have been made during the week at $1.22½. The pack is virtually over and is believed to be at least 12,000,000 cases. There is no warrant, therefore, for the present high prices, except the fact that the holders can get the money. From the standpoint of the 12,000,000 pack, the price of Maryland 3s should not be over $1, and in many years, with a pack that size, it has been much less than $1. Sales of new pack goods have been very good, and it is said that less than 10 per cent. of the pack remains in packers' hands. Corn is also out of the question for anybody who wants to buy cheap. Sales of Southern Maine style corn have been made during the week at $1.15, in a large way. This is getting close to twice the normal price. Peas have shown no change during the week, but will start to advance with other canned goods in a very short time. California canned goods are unchanged and fairly well cleaned up. Small Eastern staple canned goods continue, in most lines, very scarce and very high. Sauer kraut has gone to $1.15, against a normal price of 60 cents. Maryland string beans are bringing twice the regular price, and there may be no pack of spinach to speak of. Next year's pack will have higher tin plate prices to contend with. This has been figured at the prices which packers will have to pay for their next season's requirements. No. 2 cans will cost 6 cents a dozen more; No. 3 will cost 8 cents a dozen more, and gallons 18 cents a dozen more.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes show no change from last week; demand is fair. Peaches and apricots are quiet at ruling prices. Raisins are much excited on account of the crop damage scare. This will reduce the production of Muscatels from 25 to 50 per cent., exactly which is not now known. Most of the sultanas and Thompson seedless raisins had been gathered when the rains came, but even so, packers are talking about a short delivery in these grades. Currants have advanced again on the other side, and on this basis, in this country would cost 16 or 17 cents a pound carton, which is just about twice the normal price.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans remain unchanged from last week; demand fair. Marrows are also unchanged, with moderate request. California limas show an advance of about 15 points for the week, and a total advance of about 40 points for the month. Green and Scotch peas are very high, especially green peas, and in light demand.

Butter.

The butter market is much easier for the week and shows a decline of 1 to 1½ cent per pound on all grades. This is due largely to the submarine scare, which has cut off all exports for the present. The markets are all quiet on account of the uncertainty of the export situation. Receipts are fair for the season and the home demand is good.

Eggs.

The egg market is steady and unchanged. The extreme high prices for the season have cut off some of the home demand. Receipts are showing good quality on account of the cooler weather in the producing sections, and the fact that the moulting season is about over. There has been some little export of eggs, but not enough to be affected by the submarine scare.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm and unchanged. The consumptive demand is good and there is still some export,

Provisions.

The provision market is firm at unchanged prices. Consumptive demand is good and the supply fair. The market is probably at the top, as the killing of hogs will increase from now on and prices should be considerably easier. Pure lard is firm, at an advance of ¼ to ½ cent. Pure lard is now retailing at 20 to 22 cents a pound, as against a normal price of 16 to 18 cents. Compound lard is very firm, at an advance of ¾ to 1 cent, due chiefly to the shortage in cotton oil and the larger home consumption, owing to the high prices of pure lard. Barreled pork is very firm at 75 cents to $1 advance. The short supply and the good consumptive demand are the causes. Dried beef continues very high on account of shortage. No change has occurred during the week. Demand is good. Canned meats unchanged, but very firm.

The National Wholesale Grocers' Association has been holding a vote among its members as to whether the National Bankruptcy Act should be repealed. The result is told in the following statement of the secretary:—

We herewith announce the result of our referendum on the subject of the Bankruptcy Law.

In accordance with instructions from the Executive Committee, our members were requested to voice their opinions on the subject of whether the Bankruptcy Law should be repealed or amended.

Of our membership, comprising over 1,000, only 641 returned their ballots.

The following figures may prove interesting:—

Favoring repeal	359
Not in favor of repeal	282
Total votes cast	641

In view of the fact that our membership has now been accorded ample opportunity to voice its sentiments with reference to the Bankruptcy Law question, and because there is such a division of opinion, as indicated by the votes actually received, this association cannot go on record either for or against a repeal at the present time, and the subject will later on be again referred to the Executive Committee for its further consideration.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Tea firm, but unchanged for the week. It is impossible to get concessions in anything desirable. Demand moderate. —Coffee somewhat easier and quiet. Brazil is shading prices, and that is having a weakening effect in this country. Milds are very dull and cheap.—Sugar continues to go higher and granulated is now quoted at 7.15 to 7.25 cents. The Week's One-Time Ads.

The good old Ferris people are back again with us this week, gentlemen. This ad. is clear meat, just as good as an ad., as the Ferris hams and bacon are good as eats. There's a bully little bit of human nature in that ad.—the story of a grocer that sold Ferris hams right along, but said he was sorry he couldn't handle Ferris bacon too, but he "got a special price on a thousand pounds of cheap Baltimore bacon." But he said, "I'm k one of your strips for my ow What he meant by that wa cheap Baltimore bacon was enough for his customers but good enough for him. Wh know about that? Somethi the limit, eh what? I hope h trade his customers for that price. Read the ad., gentlem go to it.

A MESSAGE to the AMERICAN GROCERS

This is to be a record year on Aunt Jemima's—the Quality Pancake and Buckwheat Flours.

More effort, more push, and more energy are to be put behind these great selling brands than ever before.

They will be advertised in a bigger, broader and more forceful way than was ever done by any manufacturer of a similar product. Full pages, many of them in brilliant four colors, will appear in the

Ladies' Home Journal
Good Housekeeping
Ladies' World
Saturday Evening Post
Woman's Home Companion

and other publications of national prominence and tremendous circulation. Street car advertising, bill posting, painted bulletins, and other forms of publicity will also be freely used to make Aunt Jemima's a household word in every home in America.

Aunt Jemima's—the Quality Pancake Flour will dominate the market because of this advertising program.

It's the favorite brand—outselling all other brands combined.

Why tie up your money, stocking miscellaneous brands?

Concentrate on Aunt Jemima's the Quality Pancake Flour, the big seller!

It gives you a quick turn-over and a liberal profit.

Recommend Aunt Jemima's—you will do your trade a favor and besides that you will save them money. Why?

AUNT JEMIMA MILLS COMPANY

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

ST. JOSEPH. MO.

Gentlemen:

It is our intention to make the season of 1916-1917 the greatest in AUNT JEMIMA'S history. The greatest in volume, greatest in profit, and greatest in satisfaction to the retailers of the country.

The greatest in volume by increasing the consumer demand; the greatest in profit to the retailer on account of the quick turn-over; and greatest in satisfaction to the retailer on account of quick and good profits, as well as the good-will that comes to him on account of satisfied customers.

The addition of powdered sweet milk in AUNT JEMIMA'S PANCAKE and BUCKWHEAT FLOUR formula, added materially to the cost, but it has improved the goods - really makes them perfect!

While the cost was increased, yet we have been able to make considerable saving on account of the volume lessening the overhead expense, which still makes it possible for us to provide a liberal retailer's profit.

Will you help us to keep up this volume? It means money to you.

Just remember that the smaller manufacturers of other brands cannot serve you as we can. They must sacrifice either quality or retailers' profits. Usually it's quality--and lack of quality hurts the retailer with his customer.

Every year we want to work closer with you for mutual profit. Every year we increase our advertising to help you make a quick turn-over on AUNT JEMIMA'S at a good profit.

Just look on the other side of this sheet, and realize the magnitude of our advertising program for the coming season.

Now, will you write me personally, if any way occurs to you by which we can do more, within reason, than we are doing, to help you and to push the sale of AUNT JEMIMA'S - THE QUALITY BRAND of PANCAKE and BUCKWHEAT FLOUR?

Your advice, I assure you, will be very welcome.

How Do You Get Around This?

D'ye know it gives me an awful feeling to have to own up I was wrong about anything? It's terrible! After being right all my life, then to wake up and find I was wrong—gee whiz!

You know it's been a pet hunch of mine that nobody that put in premiums or trading stamps or anything like that, could ever get along without 'em afterwards. I've always said that, and I've always believed it. Seemed natural, didn't it, that when you've been handing customers something extra for a good while that when you took it away from 'em, they'd squeal and maybe drop you? Sure it did, and for me there wasn't anything else to it.

Well, it seems I was wrong, and being a fine man like I am, I've got to stand up right here in lodge and say so.

This is how I know I was wrong:

In a little town I go to every once in a while there's a chain store that up to a year or so give out trading stamps. They did a whacking business, all with stamps. Thirty extra stamps with this, and fifty extra with that, and they had the people of the town eating 'em up. Everybody was piling up the stamps.

When they gave out they were going to cut out the stamps, all the other dealers in the place were tickled to pieces. "That'll kill 'em!" they said. "They can't do a thing like that! They're simply digging their own grave, glory Hallelujah!"

And by gum, I thought they were right. I would have sworn they were right.

D'ye know, it didn't seem to make a mite of difference? That's a fact—not a mite! They're doing more business to-day up there than they ever did. At least that's what the other dealers say, and you can bet your neck they know.

"Why, how do you account for that?" I said, when one of 'em told me. "Everybody thought it would kill 'em."

"So did I," he said, "but it seems they've got the people hypnotized."

Listen here. It's my bet that if storekeepers had known they could put premiums in and throw 'em out when they got ready, if they didn't like 'em, a heap more would have put in premiums.

They all thought you couldn't do that, and so did I, and me knowing everything, too.

Now here's another thing these chain stores have done that puts a lot of you fellows in bad, too. Not me, I always said this could be done, but you said it couldn't.

They've cut out delivering goods. I don't know how many of my customers have said to me, "If I could only cut out delivery, I'd be all right."

"Well, why can't you?" I'd say. "There ain't any law making you deliver goods."

"I couldn't hold my trade," they'd say, and you couldn't make 'em see it any other way.

All right, the chain stores have done it and held their trade. Up in this same town they don't deliver a cent's worth. One of my customers tells me you can see people going in there with baskets by the dozen. They come in their autos, and they bring their little boys with express wagons, and they do a lot of things, but they have to do it themselves—the store don't do it.

Now, how do you get around that?

I'll tell you how I get around it in a minute.

I don't think every retailer can say I won't deliver and get away with it. Not by a jugfull. Some of 'em have got a kind of business where they've got to. No doubt about that. But some of 'em don't have to, and if you could only get 'em to think so, they could cut it out to-morrow and cut their expenses five per cent.

I call a fellow that won't do it "Old-Man-Afraid-Of-His-Customers." When you get that way, you begin to lose weight. It ain't healthy. I don't know what would become of me if I got fussed up over that. I'm as independent as a hog on ice when I go out to sell goods. So far as my customers can see, I don't care a blame wh they buy my goods or not. B tween you and me and the door, I only look that way. up as late as anybody to hol trade, but I ain't going to l customers know it, you can be neck.

Of course I'm better fixed some of you—I've got a fine able-bodied wife that can wor get out of a job. She works as a matter of fact—works n she can (which ain't much).

The Danger of Buying Cheap Refrigerat

The very last thing a grocer should think of when he buys a refrigerator is price. We don't mean he should throw any money away, but he should think first of the money-saving features of a refrigerator—its long-lasting and permanent efficiency—and when he is satisfied he has a refrigerator that will give him that, he should pay any reasonable price for it, because it will pay him in the end. In fact it will begin to pay him from the minute he puts it in.

Speaking of the well-known McCray Refrigerator as a high class refrigerator, it is easy to buy a cheaper refrigerator than the McCray. And it is just possible that it may look as well on the outside. But the greater cheapness and the appearance soon lose every particle of their weight when a comparison of the refrigerating efficiency—the only proper basis for comparison—is made.

One of the most important features in connection with a successful grocer's business is the matter of refrigeration and there will be a mighty big leak in his business unless this all-important item is given the most careful consideration.

A very large percentage of his business is dependent upon the efficiency of his refrigerator equipment. The construction must be in accordance with certain scientific principles that insure a positive, cold, dry air circulation, and the walls must be constructed of materials that have the greatest heat-repelling qualities.

While a refrigerator may have an attractive exterior, its real value depends upon the material and struction between the walls. temporary satisfaction which may enjoy from a low price equals the everlasting regret poor quality. Real economy s prompt you to invest a little money in your refrigerator ment, as the increased effi will result in a saving in th of perishables and consumpti ice that will very soon excee difference between the price McCray Refrigerator and a ferior one.

Burk's Philadelphia Scrapple

Prepared from the very best materials—good, wholesome meats and extra fine corn meal. Well boiled and seasoned to suit the most critical. Not to be compared with some cheap products of doubtful hues and colors. Burk's eats as good as it looks. Superior to farmers' products. In pans of 15 pounds each.

Burk's Pig Souse

Burk's Liver Pudding

Of the usual "Burk" standard—clean and unadulterated. Rich in quality and an excellent dish when fried, or, after removing the casing, hashed with potatoes. In rings of 1 pound each.

A Fair Question And Our Answer

"Can I sell more of one of your standardized brands than I can of some other brand costing the same price?"

We say yes, almost certainly you can. Why? Well, first because the quality is apt to be better. We go to lengths in selecting Coffee that other houses don't go to.

But the main reason is that our standardardized brand, when once you get a customer buying it, will never betray you by fluctuating in quality. We move heaven and earth to keep Harisco Standardized Coffees uniform, and that is why we so emphatically guarantee the line to help any retailer's Coffee Department. No. 385.—Never Bring a False Representation Case Without Fullest Investigation.

About six months ago a retail dealer doing business about seven miles from this city, opened an account with us. He came fairly well recommended and made a financial statement which our credit man thought warranted a line of several hundred dollars. We continued to sell him on regular terms, and he paid promptly, until about two weeks ago, when we heard rumors that he was a snide and was getting ready to fail. We investigated this, and found information which indicated that it was true. We then investigated a little further and apparently found that some real estate which this customer had given in his statement as a part of his assets, was really in his wife's name and was not liable, so our attorney advised us, for his debts. Being told this, and in order to forestall what we believe was our coming loss by reason of his failure, we had the man arrested for obtaining credit under false pretences regarding the ownership of real estate, hoping that this might at least get us a settlement of our account. He was held in bail for court, and the case is still not disposed of, but we have learned that we were in error about the false representation. The real estate in question was in his name at the time he set it forth in his statement and is in his wife's name now, but only because his wife exchanged some other real estate for it. This customer was worth what he said he was, and it therefore looks as if we were wrong in having him arrested. What course can he take against us? We hear that he intends to do something.

I withhold both the name and address of the writer of this, because otherwise I should not like to answer it publicly. I want to answer it publicly, because it touches a subject of general interest and of much importance.

The very day I received this letter, a Philadelphia court gave to one Isaac Gross, a general storekeeper, a verdict of $3,075 against a Philadelphia wholesale house—Lichtenstein Bros. & Sons. The facts were similar to those set forth in the above letter. The jobbing house accused Gross of obtaining goods from them under false statements as to his financial responsibility. He denied it, and they had him arrested. He was tried and acquitted, and at once brought suit for damages for malicious prosecution. The verdict of $3,075 is the result.

There is no doubt that in the case cited in the above letter the customer can bring suit against my correspondent for malicious prosecution. Whether he will win it is of course a different thing, but he has all the elements to work with. He was accused and arrested for a criminal offense, thereby being put to expense and shame. When tried he will doubtless be acquitted, as there will be no evidence against him. I am free to say that if I were his counsel I should advise him that the next step should be the bringing of a suit for malicious prosecution.

It is a malicious prosecution when A brings a criminal action—in most States a civil action also—against B, upon insufficient grounds. It can be knowingly done, it can be recklessly done, or it can be carelessly done. Even if the prosecutor thought his ground was good, he is held responsible if it proves to be bad, if he could have found it was bad had he looked the matter up before acting. Nobody is expected to issue a warrant for another person's arrest unless he knows precisely what he is doing.

It will therefore not be enough for this correspondent to say "I acted in good faith, believing I was right." He must further say, "I investigated and had every reason to believe I was right."

That means what the law calls "probable cause." If the prosecutor who is afterward sued for malicious prosecution had probable cause for what he did, he is not liable in damages, because then the law says the act was not malicious. What is probable cause? Any state of facts which after careful investigation would convince the average man that the person whose arrest he was contemplating was guilty. In other words, if the above correspondent carefully investigated all reasonable sources of knowledge, and everything he found pointed to his customer's guilt, then he had probable cause. But if he only partially investigated—in other words, if he was careless, if he jumped at conclusions, the jury would almost certainly hold that he had no probable cause and mulct him in damages.

Before having a customer arrested, or anybody else, for that matter, always consult a lawyer. Always. The fact that you acted on an attorney's advice is always considered evidence in your favor, as showing probable cause and absence of malice.

Every man who obtains money or goods, or anything whatever, under false representations, should be arrested as an example to others. Moreover, it is usually the quickest way to induce him to undo the wrong he has done. But never do it until you have carefully looked up every fact which could bear upon his guilt. In the case submitted by the above correspondent, I should have taken my warrant, and an officer to serve it, to the customer and confronted him with the evidence I had against him. If he had any explanation, I should investigate it before serving the warrant. If he gave none, the case against him would be very much strengthened, and I should serve the warrant then and there. Apparently this course would have prevented the above situation.

Banner Season Expected for Mixed Syrup.

Largely Because of the Falling Off in Home Canning and Preserving and the Scarcity of Packer's Goods. Jars Had Very Poor Season.

Handlers of syrup are expecting this to be a banner season for it, although the price is high. This because very little fruit was put up and syrup is a standard substitute for canned fruit.

Jobbers in fruit jars say there has never been a year when jars sold so poorly. This is because fewer people put up fruit, and that in turn came because sugar was so high that thousands of housekeepers cut preserving out. The sugar companies realized that this was going to happen, and did considerable advertising in order to counteract it, but the summer demand was very poor. Also, fruit in many lines was not abundant. There are no statistics as to what this season's home canning and preserving amounts to, compared with normal, but it is unquestionably far below. The commercial packs of these goods were also poor.

Compound or mixed syrup is about the only available syrup this year. Sugar syrup long ago yielded precedence to compound syrup, but this year is particularly scarce on account of the sugar situation. There is very little good sugar syrup about. Compound syrup is 4 to 5 cents per gallon above normal in bulk, but some of the tinned brands have not advanced in price.

Dear Sir:—Inclosed please find list which we have just recently given to our trade.

Please give us through your valuable columns your corrections, whereby we can improve same.

Yours truly,
H. S. GROVE.

The advertisement enclosed was a gray card 7 x 11 inches, printed in black on both sides. Its appearance was almost destroyed for me because it was so crowded that the white margin around the edge was only ¼ inch wide. The card appeared overfull, which will kill the appearance of any piece of advertising. However, I don't say that because of this it produced no results. In spite of this it is good, clean-looking advertising and I should expect it to pull. All the same, it is just as well to have good appearance as an ally, if you can. Below is a reduced photographic reproduction of one side.

This is fine. Whoever wrote this is a natural advertisement writer. This has the true ring—the selling quality. If Mr. Grove should tell me that this brought inadequate results, I should be an extremely surprised man, for it has every element of good advertising, always provided it is properly distributed. Of course as much lies in the distribution as in anything else. Some otherwise keen advertisers fail to realize this, and practice false economy with the distribution end of their advertising. See that it gets into people's hands, no matter what it costs.

The other side of this card is precisely like the reproduced side. The head is simply "Grove's Cash Grocery." Mr. Grove has succeeded in accomplishing what is really the object of all advertising, viz., to write down the reasons why people should buy the goods advertised. Let me amend that a little. Reasons why people should buy the goods advertised, of the store advertising them. Some grocery advertisers write good advertising for particular goods, which are on sale at other—or every—store. I don't need to point out the weak point of that. Advertising of a retail store should not be an advertisement of brands alone, but of brands for which people are to come to this particular store. That is why it always pays best to advertise goods which you can make seem like your own—obtainable nowhere else.

Now Is the Time to Buy

If your business keeps two or more horses busy, there's just one reason why you are not using an

International Motor Truck

You don't know what it will do for you!

That's true. If you knew how much actual cash it saves, you would buy an International Motor Truck, because you could hardly make a better paying investment. If it added only twenty-five cents a day to your net profits—that would be better than 8 per cent. interest on the price of a Model E.

That is not all it does, by any means, but that should be enough to interest you, a business man. Write for our complete figures on motor truck saving, or, better yet—see the trucks themselves. There are three good models at the lowest prices ever made on trucks of this quality and capacity.

E —1500 pounds capacity, with express body, complete . . . . . $ 950
H—1500 pounds capacity, internal gear drive (chassis) $1225
F —2000 pounds capacity, internal gear drive (chassis) $1500

Is it any wonder that over 13,000 successful business men use and boost for the International Motor Truck? It makes money for them. A line to the address below will bring you figures showing what you may expect an International to do for you.

Don't Sell Unprofitable Wheat Cereals

Every grocer must sell at least one wheat cereal. Some wheat cereals actually cost him money to sell, instead of paying a profit.

Wheatena is the best wheat cereal made—the most carefully made—and has always paid the retailer a good profit. Merchandise which is at the same time good and profitable is the only kind to sell.

Fifth Plan to Improve the Retailers' Condition is Launched by the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World

Mammoth Organization of Sixteen Thousand Will Try and Educate Retailers to be Better Business Men for the General Good of Business. Effort is to Have a Lot of Retailers Using the Same System. What the Scope of the Plans Will Be.

The most powerful business forces of the country are working together to help the retailer make a better merchant of himself. Chiefly by improving his method of figuring costs and keeping his accounts, which is the weakest point in the average retail business.

There are at present five separate and distinct movements under way for the improvement of the retailer's condition:—

1—The Department of Retailers' Education, conducted by the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, although nothing tangible has come out of this as yet.

2—The system of keeping retailers' accounts, devised by the Bureau of Research of Harvard College.

3—The system of keeping retailers' accounts, devised by the Federal Trade Commission.

4—The National Mercantile Educational Association—described last week—formed by representatives of fourteen national jobbing associations.

5—A service plan of improving the conduct of any retail business, which has been worked out by the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

All of the above have been fully exploited and described in this paper except the fifth, which has just been announced. This scheme is really more elaborate, perhaps, than most of the others. The Associated Advertising Clubs, which has 16,000 members, all men affiliated in some way with advertising, will endeavor to induce a large number of retailers in all staple lines, such as groceries, hardware, shoes, dry goods, jewelry, etc., adopt a standardized cost and accounting system. This is the club's own statement of the reasons:—

> By installing the same system in a large number of stores in each line, so that each of a large number of merchants will have the same facts, it will be possible, through the service department of the Associated Advertising Clubs at Indianapolis, in co-operation with the Business Research Bureau of Harvard University, to compare results in various communities and thus to give a local merchant the advantage of the experience of many other merchants in the solution of his problems.
> For several months the preparation of the system has been under way, and while they are all fundamentally similar, there is an individual system for each line of business. They all follow, in a general way, a system for retail jewelers which was worked out, at a very considerable expense, by the Ingersoll watch people. The Ingersoll system is in use by more than 400 retail jewelers and has proved successful, both as a means of giving the retailer daily knowledge of the condition of his business and enabling him to compare his situation and his results with those of many other jewelers in other cities and towns about the size of his own.
> Concluding that no man would be without the facts upon which he could diagonise his business troubles without good reason, those who studied the problem looked for a reason why better systems were not in use, and found this was because most systems were burdensome to keep up, and that rather than do all the work necessary, the average retailer, with his other duties to consider, would prefer to take chances instead of attempting to take on such additional work.
> It was at this point that the advertising men began to look for simplified records, such as could be kept with an hour or so of labor a day, and such a system was found, with the aid of Harvard University, the Ingersoll people, the national organization of accountants, retailers who had studied the problem, and others.
> Records for the shoe and jewelry business were the first worked out. They are ready for service and are being installed as this announcement is written. About the time this will appear in print, systems for hardware, drug and grocery stores will have been completed, and the installation of all five systems will be pushed at one time.
> The service of the department will go further than mere bookkeeping information. It will help the dealer solve problems that present themselves from time to time as a result of the keeping of such records.
> Briefly, these records, though simple and easy to keep, will afford the retailer a perpetual inventory, showing him, among other things:
> The total capital tied up in his business.
> The total of his outstanding accounts (at all times).
> What parts of his business are making and what parts are losing money.
> What classes of goods sell rapidly; what slowly.
> How many turnovers he gets a year on the line as a whole, and in each department of his business.
> How much each sales person is selling and therefore earning.
> Just what, at all times, he owes.
> Those are only a few of the things the records will tell the retailer, and are cited merely as examples.
> The advertising men suggest that with such records the merchant can at all times show his banker just where he stands, and in the event of a fire, he can give the insurance company such accurate information as to the current condition of his stock that adjustments can be made with practically no delay, as has been proved through experience. The dangers of over-stocking, or of robbing the operating capital to too great a degree through extending too large a volume of credits, need have no terrors under the operation of such a system.

Trying Now to Make Manufacturers Put Entire Formulas on Labels.

The State Food Standard Commission of Illinois has sent out the following announcement concerning a further hearing on the question of declaring percentages of ingredients on labels:—

To Whom It May Concern:

The Illinois State Food Standard Commission announces that it has received several requests from individuals, clubs and associations, to be heard on the question of percentages in relation to the labeling of jams, jellies and preserves, and has decided to hold another public hearing on the subject on October 26, 1916, at 1627 Manhattan Building, Chicago, Ill.

The discussion will be confined strictly to the proposition of a declaration of percentages of all ingredients used.

All persons wishing to file briefs may do so, but all briefs will be read at the time of the hearing, for the purpose of discussion.

otato Shippers Found Guilty of Restraining Competition.

ive officials of the Aroostook aine) Potato Shippers' Association e during the week found guilty un- the Sherman Act of conspiracy in traint of trade. Sentence was de- red. The defendants are Carl C. g, president of the association; John Hovey, secretary; Clarence H. weres, member of a so-called listing mmittee; Edward H. Doyle, New York agent, and H. W. Sylvester, Boston agent. During the trial the Government introduced evidence to show that the defendants had blacklisted dealers in potatoes who failed to conduct their business in accordance with the wishes of the association, and that they also opened secondary boycott against persons who traded with blacklisted individuals. The defense claimed immunity under the Clayton amendment to the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, on the ground that the organization was an agricultural association and exempt from prosecution. Judge James M. Morton, Jr., who presided at the trial in the Federal Court, held that the defendants were entitled to protect their trade, but that the jury must decide whether they were justified in the measures that they adopted.

Isaksen Co's Three Thousand Barrels of Norway Mackerel Were a Surprise.

Other American Importers Thought There Were No Fish Over There. Norway Mackerel Have Call Always.

The surprise which Mons Isaksen, Inc., the big New York and European fish dealers has just handed the trade of this country is a leading topic of conversation. At a time when the American importers of Norway mackerel thought there were no more fish over there, the Isaksen Co. digs up 3,000 barrels and brings them all over here. The importers who were beaten, such as the Philadelphia Levin outfit, are trying hard to convince the trade that Irish and shore mackerel are as desirable as Norways, but Norway mackerel have the call always. In many respects, color among them, they are unquestionably the best mackerel in the world.

The Mons Isaksen Co. has established a new method of distributing Norway mackerel in this country. Formerly a Norway packer would come over here and offer his output to one of the two larger operators. The latter would offer a low price, which the packer would refuse. He would then go to the other, but the first would quickly communicate with the second, and when the packer reached his destination, he found the cards stacked. The Isaksen Co. is ignoring the two larger operators—in fact there is a rumor that it has refused to sell them altogether—and is going straight to the trade, offering Norway mackerel to everybody alike and giving nobody control.

WITH THE EDITOR

A representative of a large city grocery store took a trip through New England this summer and wrote the following description of a New England country store. I have seen dozens of such stores. The picture is true to the life:—

Nobody Can Beat the Country Store in This.

> The scene is a small New England village with perhaps two or three hundred inhabitants. There is one main street, with a church located on the further end and a moving picture house open two evenings in a week over the main store, which is in the center. We are on a vacation and are merely touring through the country for pleasure. This is a farming region and many of the homes which we see are the property of well-to-do farmers.
> The store catches our eye, and being interested in the business of selling groceries, we are tempted to enter and see what a country store is like.
> A flight of steps leads up to the broad platform which occupies the whole frontage of the store. There is no hum of industry here, everything seems quiet and peaceful, and we cannot help comparing it with the business of which we are a part. A young woman, sole occupant of the broad veranda is seated just outside the store door. She is crocheting, and is evidently the mother of the two chubby barefoot children who are playing in the street directly in front. We come to this conclusion, because we note the watchful glances which she directs at them from time to time.
> We enter the store and the proprietor comes forward. He is dressed in khaki and greets us with a pleasant good morning. We purchase a half dozen picture post cards and a Boston newspaper; in the meantime, looking over his stock. Here one can buy almost anything, from a paper of pins to a milk separator, groceries, dry goods and hardware being some of the things which we see.
> During the fifteen minutes which we remain, some three or four customers enter and make purchases. The proprietor is acquainted with each and calls them by name. The entire village buys its supplies here, and he probably knows every one in the village. He comes in close contact personally with all, and in this manner holds their trade. Contrast these conditions with our own busy market.

A little further on, the writer of the above asks: "How can we establish those close personal relations with our customers so that they will feel that our market is their market, and be loyal enough to return to us day after day, and purchase their food supplies?"

You can't. No large store can, no chain store can. The personal relation is something that the small country or small town store has on everybody else. As I have said before, the large store has but little personality or heart—call it what you will—and the chain store has none.

Yet the fact remains that the chain store, without heart and without personality, has succeeded to a greater degree than any other mercantile enterprise in the United States. Why? Partly because the average retailer who is competing with the chain store doesn't use his personality in his own business.

The retailer who thinks the jobber is a useless incumbrance—a middleman who simply stands in the way of the direct distribution of merchandise—is not always far-seeing or fair. In times like the present, when everything is advancing, jobbers are saving retailers thousands of dollars every day. Probably no jobber in business is charging the retailer, on any one of the many products which are advancing, anything like the present first hands market price. In the aggregate this means an enormous saving, for no average retailer could buy from first hands at a price below the first hands market.

Giving Jobbers Their Due.

For instance, witness this little conversation during the week between a Philadelphia wholesale grocer and a canned goods broker. The jobber had some time before bought from the broker a quantity of corn which I will call Regal:—

> "What's the price of Regal corn to-day?" asked the jobber.
> "One dollar and fifteen cents a dozen," was the reply, "and going higher."
> "Well, I guess I'd better put my price up to ninety-five cents," said the jobber.

Now what does that mean? It means that if the retailer attempted to buy Regal corn direct, he could not get it below $1.15, no matter how much he bought. Yet his jobber sells it to him at 95 cents and has only just now started to charge even that much. In times of advancing prices, I believe there is never a time when the jobber does not protect his customers by selling them below the first hands market. The price of granulated sugar today from refiner to jobber is 7¼ cents, yet the great majority of retailers who read this know that they have never paid that much.

Give a man his due.

The 1-cent sales of the big drug houses have been discussed in this paper from time to time. They are held by responsible people and appear to be honest and bona fide. A consumer is charged 25 cents for a 25-cent package of something, and given an extra package for 1 cent—two packages for 26 cents. Naturally these sales, being undoubted bargains, attract universal attention. I have personally seen a street in front of a drug store crowded with people pushing in to patronize one of these sales and everybody seems to agree that they are big business-getters.

A New One-Cent Sale Scheme and the Grocer.

All this would be none of the grocers' business were it not that the United Drug Co., which among other companies conducts these sales, has adopted a new plan which is putting thousands of small retail druggists, in country towns and city suburbs, into the grocery business in a way disastrous to the regular retailer. The United Drug Co. has picked out thousands of retail drug stores in various places and called each one a Rex-all Store. On Thursday, Friday and Saturday last each one of these held a 1-cent sale, in which it offered tea, coffee, olives, cocoa, jam, marmalade and peanut butter, all on the 1-cent sale basis. That this will have an effect on the local grocery business nobody can deny. It is bound to have. People will load up with the 1-cent stuff, and for some time to come will be out of the market for their regular wants. More than that, prices are demoralized.

What is the grocer to do? First, if the 1-cent sale includes any of the brands he is selling, he should throw them out as quickly as he can and never put them in again. I believe most of the goods are the United Drug Co's private brands, though the cocoa advertised in last week's sale was Peters.

Second, he might with profit with his fellow grocers in the t to hold a 1-cent drug sale. He easily buy all the drug specia he wants, and if he uses the merely as an advertisement an content to let his profit on the d go, he can wipe up the floor the 1-cent sale druggist, just as druggist wiped it up with him. written notice should be sent to druggist, signed by all the gro who join the enterprise, that intend to hold the drug sale an example to him, because they gard his cut-priced sale of gro ies—goods he will probably n keep again—as an illegitimate tack upon their business. This intelligently carried out, will n a druggist so sick of the 1-cent that a penny will feel hot to hand for a very long time.

If the grocer isn't too prou fight, he ought to get at it.

New Purity Standards in Prepara for Spices.

The hearing to make spice stand under the Federal Food Law was in New York last Monday. M well-known spice men were pre Suggested standards for cayenne red pepper caused considerable dis sion. The definition of each also dwelt on at length. E. W. Durkee that most people who sent in or for red pepper called for cayenn their communications. John Clarke John Clarke & Co., and William Weikel, of Weikel & Smith Spice intimated that there would be a sh age of some spices if the Governm officials made their regulations strict. Chairman Alsberg, of the partment of Agriculture, who presi held that Hungarian pepper could called paprika, while that from Sp should be labeled as such. The pepper question now is a serious on the trade. It is scarce and the Al are said to be purchasing it in la quantities. Mr. Clarke stated th were thirty varieties of red peppers that the Government should not li its activities to two grades. It is p posed to change the standard for g ger to read: "Ginger in the washed dried or decorticated and dried rhizo of Zanzibar zingiber (L) Krast., contains not less than 42 per cent. starch; not more than 8 per cent. crude fiber, not more than 7 per c of total ash, not more than 1 per c of lime, and not more than 2 per c of ash insoluble in hydrochloric aci According to present plans, the star for ground mustard is to be ed so as to read: "Ground mus- is a powder made from mustard with or without the removal of ulls and a portion of the fixed oil, contains not more than 1 5-10 per of starch and not more than 6 cent. of total ash." There is a ence of opinion among the trade ding this standard.

A motion picture was shown and then a bountiful supper concluded the afternoon session.

The evening was set apart for entertainment, consisting of music, recitals and a splendid address by Dr. James E. Norcross, of New York.

The Resolution Committee reported and the convention adjourned. It was a big event.

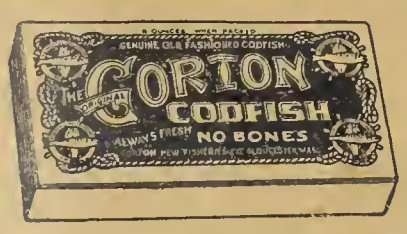
One-Cent Sales Are Putting Small Druggists Into the Grocery Business.

Rex-all Drug Co. Picks Out a Small Druggist in Towns and City Suburbs and Has Him Hold a One-Cent Sale of Tea, Coffee, Chocolate, Jam, Peanut Butter, etc.

The 1 cent sales which are being conducted by the big drug concerns are assuming some importance to the retail grocer, because of the way in which some of them are now being conducted. The sales have been discussed before in these columns. A large variety of articles are sold in this way: If the regular price is 25 cents, one is sold for 25 cents, and two for 26 cents. That is why they are called 1-cent sales.

The 1-cent sales were bad enough when they were conducted only by the large central retail drug stores, but the Rexall concern, a large manufacturing house which has been making a specialty of 1-cent sales, is using quite a different method. It selects a retail drug store in every section—largely in small towns and the suburbs of the cities, calls it a Rexall Store and has its 1-cent sale there. And package foods are sold as well as drug specialties. One of these small drug stores in Germantown held such a sale on Thursday, Friday and Saturday last, and among cold cream, tooth paste, and the other usual drug specialties, appeared the following:—

1 lb. Opeko Coffee, 1 lb. 35c., 2 lbs. . 36c
1 lb. Liggett's Opeko Tea, ½ lb. pkt. 35c., 2 pkts. 36c
25c ½ lb. can Peters Cocoa . . 2 for 26c
25c Raspberry or Strawberry Currant Jam . . . . . 2 for 26c
35c Bottle Olives . . . . . 2 for 36c
30c Marmalade . . . . . 2 for 31c
20c Pinolea Peanut Butter . . 2 for 21c



Many other drug stores held the same sale on the same days.

This Tells the Tale

¶ A product which has been on the market fifty-eight years is a product which has stood the hardest of all tests—the test of time. "Knight's Cooking Extracts" is a phrase familiar to man, woman and child, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf. It is easy to tell why; no housewife ever had a bottle go back on her and no housewife ever will. Good extracts must be on your shelves. Grocers, if you sell Knight's Extracts we need say nothing more to you; if you don't, we want one order from you—we are sure of more. You are certain of their absolute purity and a good profit.

There Is No Real Substitute for Gorton's Codfish

¶ Codfish is high this year, and you will doubtless be offered substitutes for codfish.

¶ The substitutes will probably be wholesome and all right, but they will not be comparable with pure codfish —Gorton's Codfish particularly.

¶ Gorton's Codfish is the finest, purest codfish packed. Like all of the Gorton fish products, it is as fine as it can be made. Millions of the fish-country people, New England, will have nothing else. You will find your customers will settle down on this for the whole winter, once you get them started on it.

The Remarkable Present Food Situation in a Nutshell. Increasing Talk of an Embargo. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, October 20, 1916.

The following interesting summary of the food market situation is taken from the "Journal of Commerce" of this city:—

> Foodstuffs are advancing in price at an unprecedented rate. The whole country is complaining. Yet the whole country is buying, regardless of price, and at a rate practically never known before. Wholesale grocers and food distributors are overwhelmed with business. Retailers are sending in orders with prices blank. Orders are being turned down for the lack of goods to fill them. Brokers find that while offering goods to one customer, some other broker has snapped them up. California, probably the greatest food-producing State in the Union, outside of the grain States, and certainly the greatest producer of canned goods, has sold all of her canned fruit, fish and vegetables out of first hands, and most of her dried fruit. It is a year of short crops of grain, fruit and vegetables.

The trade here are beginning to talk very seriously about an embargo upon American foodstuffs. There appears to be no doubt that if the Government should impose such an embargo the prices of a very long list of staples would drop. The tremendous foreign demand is responsible for the present high prices. Mr. Arthur Williams, of Arthur C. Williams & Co., stated during the week:—

> For more than two years we have been supplying Europe with foodstuffs, and lavishly at that. Well, that was all right, for we had big crops and plenty to spare. The years 1914 and 1915 will be memorable ones from a crop standpoint. But 1916 is different. It is a short crop year. Look at your wheat crop, your corn, peas, beans, raisins, tomatoes! Every crop is either short or barely an average. There is no abundance. And yet we go right on selling Europe with a prodigal liberality, utterly reckless of where it is all coming from. The Belgian Relief Commission, alone has bought vast quantities of beans, and now we are short ourselves.

The only argument which has been made against an embargo is that we have no right to place our own interests so completely above our obligations to feed the starving millions of Europe. There is a great deal to say in support of the contention that if we shut down on the exportations of food products, literally millions of Europeans would starve to death.

The lawsuit between R. H. Macy & Co., local department store people, and the Victor Talking Machine Co., which is to decide whether the Victor Co. has a right to prevent dealers from fixing their own prices on Victor Talking Machines and Records, has finally reached the United States Supreme Court, and will be argued on December 4th. This case was originally brought in the United States District Court and was decided against the Victor Company. It was appealed to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, which reversed the decision and decided that the Victor Co. could control its prices. Later an appeal was taken from this decision, and the whole matter will now be thrashed out in the Supreme Court. The case is extremely important in its bearing upon the right to fix prices.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Tea quiet, with fair demand, full prices being gotten for everything. Both greens and blacks are firm.—Coffee dull, but some little business doing every day. Feeling in Brazil seems to be weak.—Sugar tending higher all the time. Raws quoted at 6½, and actual sales have been made at 6.27. Most refiners quoting 7.35 for granulated, though some are asking 7.50.—Canned tomatoes very firm and high. Present quotations $1.25 f. o. b. factory in a large way. Some sales made in this market at that, but the trade generally are not buying. Corn very scarce and high. Maryland Maine style quoted up to $1.25, which is just twice the normal price. About the lowest peas obtainable here are 95 cents. Domestic sardines scarce and high; prices unchanged. Salmon also firm and high on account of scarcity. Stock of pinks light. Reds being quoted on account of scarcity, up to $1.85 to $1.90. Canned fruits firm, though without change for the week; very few packers offering goods.—The raisin situation somewhat improved, as the shortage is not so bad as was expected. Situation still firm, however. Prunes firm at a fractional advance. Peaches and apricots firm but comparatively quiet. Currants show further advance of about 1 cent per pound in cartons. Situation very strong.—Wheat still going abroad and ruling at very high prices on account of that fact.—Flour shows 20 cents a barrel advance for the week, and fancy patents, in carload lots, are now quoted at $10.05.

Another $20,000,000 Chain Store Concern Offers Stock for Sale.

Will Establish One Thousand Stores for the Sale of All Kinds of Merchandise, But Not East of Ohio. Concern Will Also Do a Mail Order Business.

A new $20,000,000 chain store corporation, which proposes to establish 1,000 retail stores, to sell merchandise "of all descriptions," is now launching itself and offering stock for sale. It is the Pugh Stores Co., with headquarters in Chicago.

The Pugh Stores Co. was incorporated February 15, 1915, for the purpose of owning and operating a combination of 1,000 chain stores supplying merchandise of every character in the most produ and greatest consuming distri the United States—the twelve tral Western States from Oh Nebraska—together with a ge mail order business, the Pugh minal Warehouse Building, cago, and the largest produce ket in the United States.

The headquarters of the com are located in the Pugh Ter Warehouse, the largest buildi its kind under one roof in United States.

There are a few stores al in business, and they claim to $7,500 a year each. The co predicts that it will make 3 cent. on the entire issue of s

The president is James A. an ex-furniture man. The con describes its plan of merchand thus: "Plan of Merchandi The Pugh plan of merchandisi the most modern and complete in operation, as it combines u the head of one organizatio methods so successfully applie Sears, Roebuck & Co., United Stores Co., F. W. Woolworth and others; adding new fea which have heretofore not been by any other organization."

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market is strengthening slightly but without change for the week. Buyers seem just a little more ready to pay the seller's price. It seems impossible now to get any concessions on anything desirable.

Coffee.

Coffee, speaking particularly of Rio and Santos, shows no change for the week, although the tendency is slightly easier. Some of the quotations which are coming forward from Brazil are a little lower and that is having its effect upon the market. Most people believe that coffee at to-day's quotations is a safe purchase. It seems reasonably sure that if peace should come the demand for Rio and Santos coffee, which is now being handled almost entirely by the United States, would be so increased that the price would advance several cents a pound. Mild coffees are dull and comparatively cheap. Java unchanged. Moc gradually working downward a fractionally lower than it w month ago, but is still about 2 above the price that was form considered about a normal aver namely, around 18 to 19 cents.

Sugar.

The sugar market is firmer all refiners are now on the basi 7.50 for granulated. Raws sold up to 6.50 during the w Situation at the moment is strong, but relief is reasonably tain to come within the next mo as Louisiana sugar and dome beet granulated will both be on market about that time. The sumptive demand for sugar is moderate.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is up 20 points for week. Compound syrup fa active at firmer prices. Sugar sy and molasses unchanged. The f crop cane juice reached North- markets during the week.

Fish.

here is no very material change ie fish situation for the week. e mackerel is beginning to be ied up, although they are still ing. Prices are unchanged. e fine 1915 Norway mackerel reached this country, greatly ie surprise of many of the deal- who did not know that there any over there. They are sell- at fair prices under the circum- ces. Irish autumn mackerel are coming, but not in any large ities, and the price has ad- ed about $1 a barrel. Salmon s no particular change from a ago. The situation is strong ccount of scarcity. Domestic ines are very scarce at pre- sly reported quotations. Im- ed sardines are very firm and Codfish is so scarce as to be of the market for a good many rs. Hake and haddock are also espondingly scarce. The price ll three are very much above nal.

Canned Goods.

he tomato market continues to remarkable and surprising gs. Sales of Maryland 3s have made during the week at $1.25 large way f. o. b. factory. No- in Philadelphia paid this price, ever, as second hands holders willing to shade it considerably. hing new is known about the as yet, but everybody seems gree that it is ample, and also gree that present prices are ex- cessive. It would be extremely risky to buy very many tomatoes at to-day's market. Corn is also, as has been previously reported, in an unprecedented condition, but there is reason for the high prices of corn, namely, short crop everywhere. Prices remain unchanged for the week. There is a better inquiry for cheap peas, which is to say the cheapest on the market. There are no really cheap peas about, and the best that can be done is around 90 cents. Ordinarily the same grade would sell at 65 to 75 cents. Apples are about 25 cents a dozen gallons higher; demand fair. California canned goods are unchanged for the week, but the undertone is strong owing to the light stock on the Coast. Small Eastern staple canned goods show no change for the week, but the stock are very much reduced. Prices very high.

Dried Fruits.

The prune market is firmer and sales have been made on the Coast on a 6-cent basis. This is an advance of ½ cent. Peaches are very much neglected. Prices are unchanged. Apricots are unchanged and in moderate demand. Seeded raisins, on account of crop shortage, are just about 1 cent above normal. Currants are now quoted at 18 cents per pound in cartons, which is more than double the normal price.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are a shade higher for the week on account of scarcity; demand good. Marrows are also about 25 cents a bushel higher from the same cause. California limas show a fractional advance and green peas are advancing steadily, having been sold during the week at $4 per bushel in-a large way. Scotch peas are unchanged, firm and very scarce.

Butter.

The butter market shows an advance of ½ cent, due to the falling off in the receipts and the good home trade. There has been more active buying during the week, and this has cleaned up the fresh receipts. The export buying done in outside markets during the week has been at 33½ to 34 cents per pound, which is the highest price ever paid for butter for export. The market will probably remain firm, with perhaps a slight additional advance.

Eggs.

The egg market has been very irregular during the entire week. Early in the week it declined 2 cents on account of an increased supply, but in a little while the fresh surplus cleaned up and the market advanced 1 cent. Probably a similar advance will occur at any time. Strictly fancy are scarce and in excellent demand considering the extreme high price for the season.

Cheese.

The cheese market is steady and unchanged. The home demand is good. The export demand continues, but mostly of under grades, and during the week has been very heavy. Exporters are hesitating to pay the top prices for fancy cheese. Receipts are a little above the average for the season and the quality has been keeping up quite well.

Provisions.

The provision market is fairly steady, although prices have been shaded slightly to make sales. The consumptive demand has been fair. The supply has been good and the market is perhaps ½ cent lower than last week. Pure lard is very firm and shows an advance of ¼ to ½ cent. Consumptive demand is good and the supply fair. Considerable lard is being sold for export and prices will probably remain high for two or three weeks. Compound lard shows an advance of ¾ to 1 cent, due partly to the good consumptive demand and also to the pure lard situation. Barreled pork is firm and unchanged, with a fair demand and light receipts. Canned meats are very firm at unchanged prices. Dried beef firm and unchanged.

Mounting Higher and Higher

It is unfortunate the cost of food products should be steadily advancing. Supply and demand regulate all markets. This year the demand is abnormal due to the universal employment of labor at high wages, while the supply is curtailed owing to partial failure of some of the most important crops that enter into everyday consumption, requires stretching to make both ends meet.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Wheat and Flour.

The British Government has set its hands to a titanic task.

Realizing that the individual buyers would hesitate to extend themselevs at the present level of prices by laying in large stocks of wheat and flour, the Government has undertaken it with the view of building up a safe reserve, keeping it replenished by a steady flow of wheat from the exporting countries.

Unfortunately, their greatest source of supply, Australia, is on the opposite side of the earth, entailing a journey of 25,000 miles for every ship. To bring 160,000,000 bushels of wheat from Australia during the next eleven months would require a fleet of 480 ships each of 5,000 tons capacity, and with the present scarcity of ships and the high rates of freight obtainable, it is a very expensive, if not impossible, undertaking. We are satisfied that the Australian surplus will not be drawn upon in any great volume until the surplus of the more accessible countries is completely exhausted.

The importing nations need at the minimum 560,000,000 bushels of wheat. Of this it is estimated that the surplus in India, including the crop that will be harvested in April, will supply 40,000,000 bushels. Canada can be counted on for 100,000,000 bushels and the United States for 140,000,000, but this quantity cannot be obtained unless the prices advance to a materially higher level. Argentina has a surplus of 20,000,000 bushels from the old crop, and the outcome of the new crop is extremely uncertain.

The linseed crop in Argentina, which is an earlier one than wheat, has been damaged 75 per cent., and unless copious rains visit the drought stricken sections there will be a tremendous loss in the wheat crop. But for the sake of argument, we will calculate 80,000,000 bushels as the probable surplus of the new crop, making a total exportable surplus of 100,000,000 bushels.

You will observe by this that it is only possible for the importing nations to obtain their requirements by draining the United States and Canada of every bushel of surplus, and by doing the same in India, Argentina and Australia. Does it not stand to reason that a greater premium will be paid for North American wheat, which can be reached by a round trip journey of 5,600 miles, than to go to Australia, with a round trip of 25,000 miles?

Many of the North American growers of wheat have the idea that they will obtain $2 a bushel or more for it, and unless the Russian surplus is released before August 1, 1917, there is every prospect that their hopes will be realized.

Imported Fish Specialties.

The cooler weather has stimulated the demand for all kinds of salt fish and the trade for herring in particular during the last week has been very good, and prices have shown a hardening tendency. The only exception is Holland herrings. It seems that owing to the arrangement which Holland made with Great Britain in regard to the exportation of Holland herrings, the Holland exporters are in a position to ship large quantities of Holland herrings to the United States; in fact, it seems that this is the only country that they will have to unload their supplies. Consequently, practically all importers of Holland herrings have received many cables from Holland asking to be informed as to the state of the market for Holland herrings. This, combined with the small demand, which still exists for Holland herrings, has had the effect of depressing the market and causing lower quotations.

The trade seems to be getting used to the prevailing high prices for all kinds of imported sardines, and is beginning to buy more freely. With the advancing prices for tinplate, and for all other raw material, and the continued scarcity of both skilled and unskilled labor, there seems to be very little chance of lower prices for imported sardines in the near future, and the trade have more confidence in the stability of present quotations and are, therefore, not as timid as they were a short time ago about stocking up.

In Norway the catch is still going on very satisfactorily and prices do not show any sign of weakening. From Portugal we hear by cable that there has been, and probably still is, a strike in the sardine factories. Besides, the catch has been very poor of late and the market is exceedingly firm and probably tending higher. The market for French sardines continues unchanged and very strong and the small lots arriving are taken readily by the fancy trade at fancy prices.

Foreign Grocery Specialties.

Italy cables that the market for pure Italian edible olive oil is very strong. Owing to an exceedingly large demand, the finest grades of edible oil are getting scarcer every day. Fortunately, the crop situation has changed somewhat for the better, so we are in hopes of seeing the market being steady without showing further considerable price advances. With cottonseed and other substitute oils being quoted at such enormously high prices in the American markets, there seems to be no chance for any lower prices on imported edible olive oil; on the contrary, an advance in the price of pure olive oil would seem in perfect order. Winter cottonseed oil is quoted to-day at nearly a dollar, and first hands predict a higher market than that. Taking into consideration the quality of pure olive oil and the quality of cottonseed oil, the price for olive oil seems unproportionately low when compared with the price now ruling for cottonseed oil. It therefore seems to us that higher prices for olive oil would be in order.

Spices.

The market is fairly active, and the consumption seeems to be on the increase. Many standard grades are scarcer now that they have been for several months past and with two busy months ahead, it would be well to have the goods in stock.

Pepper.—The market is higher, both here and abroad. Java grades are firmer, also Lampong. Stocks in our country are not unusually large at present, and the large consuming demand that is now on will have a tendency to increase values.

Cloves.—Are steady and in fair demand. Futures are a little easier.

Mace.—In better demand at generally unchanged prices.

Nutmegs.—In better demand. Present prices we consider safe.

Gingers.—In fair demand at steady prices for all grades. The spot supply is now reported very limited.

Tapioca.—Somewhat higher and in very active demand at present.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—Caraway and poppy seeds have advanced steadily during the week. Marjoram is also very much higher. Mustard unchanged. Coriander steady since last advance.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Collecting a Bill.—There are just as many bad ways of trying to collect a bill as there are good. The secret, like that of selling goods, lies largely in the manner of your approach.

Your approach must be kindly, it must take on a real spirit of friendliness without assuming the too common apologetic air. You have no apologies to make and the more that is emphasized the better.

"I see I am just in time to get a scratch of your pen," isn't bad, or, "I have a little bill here that both of us will be glad to have settled."

Yet we have to study our man and our woman just as discreetly in collecting for what we sold as in the selling itself. More so, we think.

Never bluster your errand before company, either; take her one side, or say, "I see you are busy now and I'll see you to-morrow morning." This may be a rather expensive proceeding from the viewpoint of your office, but in the end it pays.

Office people deal in cold figures and hard and fast dates and do not always appreciate the tact required to meet those figures and dates with real cash.

Women Like Consideration.—Often a woman will land at the counter with several bundles. Don't wait until she asks you to wrap them together for her. Suggest doing it yourself. It shows a nice, courteous consideration. Don't let a woman struggle with a basket of goods if the trolley stops at your corner. If the young one is crying ask the mother if you may give it a chocolate drop. Fish out a chair where you see an indication of overweariness or old age. Little things these are, to be sure, but big friendship-binding factors. Many a corner is turned until the customer gets to the store where "that accommodating clerk" works. Put these little things into practice; no extra labor. The reward is big.

Doesn't Pay to Stand Still.—That is, figuratively speaking. A business can't do it and remain a big investment a great while. A young man can't if he intends getting the best out of himself. A beaten path is easier to trudge along than making a mere cut through the woods. Keep thinking. That's what that brain was placed in your head for. Try to figure out a better way to handle the delivery or a more convenient arrangement for placing your shelf or counter stock. Is the cash register in as handy a place as it might be? If the cashier's desk were moved a few feet, would it save steps and time and annoyance?

Look over the stock for imp ments and suggest these things t head. The boss has more on his than you think.

Try This Kind of a Windo Take thirty small carrier baskets them with white (not manilla) p Carelessly place in each basket a bottles of one kind of pickles another olives; in another catsu another vinegar, etc.—all the dif sizes you've got in stock. Cove floor of the window with bay l Have a card in each basket, 2 giving name and price. Let a big be hung in the center reading, "No in the Window but Appetizers." I tested this out and got splendid r from it. It is a case of getting o the rut, you see, and thus getting from the "standing still" habit.

Keep a Clean Counter.—Don't a sheet of paper on the counter. the remaining bags back in the After showing the sample bottle it back on the shelf. The same cereals and canned goods. Yet should have a neat counter d always and you should change it In connection with this, let me im upon you the importance of ke your scales clean and adjusting every morning. The scoop of the should invariably shine. You can it this way by five minutes' ru every morning. The effect of a sh scale on the buyer is good.

It's Now Soup Time.—The w with a big family usually makes own. Good idea to make a displ beans, peas, rice, lentils, macaroni Let the big card read, "Things Making Wholesome Soup for Fall Winter Weather." If your stores ca fresh meats, a couple of soup b nicely cracked and laid out on a pl will make out your show doubly e tive.

* * *

Cut Out Personal Talk.—Neve guilty of letting a customer hear discussing a fight or game, a sho anything personal or foreign to the ness, when you're back of the cou It's the worst of taste. Some of may be guilty. Occasionally we offense without knowing it. "Straight Talks" is for you. Wher it pinches size yourself up. The o in writing these articles is to r better grocery clerks. Just as surel you're reading this you'll become b clerks, better business men, better altogether, by following up and ca ing out the suggestions printed on page week after week.

We Appeal to the Grocer— We Do Not Try to Force Him

When we started to put Goldenoyle on the market, we could have gone to the consumer alone and tried to persuade her to force you to handle it.

We don't believe in that. We advertised to you before we advertised to anybody else, because we had confidence, and still have, that you can judge good merchandise on its merits, and will meet a manufacturer half way on a worthy proposition.

Goldenoyle is a good proposition from any standpoint. It is the most highly refined vegetable salad oil on the market—we say that from twenty-five years' experience as oil refiners. You remember what Prof. Allyn, the Westfield chemist, said about it.

Packed 4 doz., 7-oz. bottles; 2 doz. small cans, 21¾ oz. each; and 1 doz. ½-gal. cans. On 3-case order we prepay the freight. Beautiful recipe book for retailers' customers.

Another Blow at Canned Salmon.

Philadelphia, Oct. 14, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Will you be kind enough to bring to the attention of the Canners' Association the following:—

The Red Feather Corporation is presenting a film entitled "Barriers of Society." In this picture a perfectly good heroine is in danger of being permanently marooned on a desert island because the captain of a yacht ate canned salmon.

This is a new form of attack. For years the newspapers have enjoyed the privilege of libeling the canning industry and now the motion picture is adopting their method.

The Canners' Association should take this matter up before the film companies hurt the canned goods business as the newspapers have done in the past.

Very truly,
W. Delaney & Son.

We Got the Wrong Haserodt.

Cleveland, Ohio, Oct. 11, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I have before me a copy of your October 2d issue of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," and on page 6, in article entitled "Tell Your Clerks to Read This," I notice you state that this article was prepared by "The Haserot Co., wholesale grocers, of Cleveland, Ohio," whereas I personally prepared this copy, and while my name is Haserodt, I am a member of the Widlar Co., importers and jobbers of teas, coffees, and spices, and in no way connected with The Haserot Co., wholesale grocers, except that they are relatives of mine, and I am wondering where you obtained the idea that this article was prepared by The Haserot Co., wholesale grocers.

I am enclosing original copy of Widlar's Suggestions to Dealers and Widlar's Suggestions to Clerks, which I personally prepared, and while the source from which these suggestions emanated makes no material difference, I thought that possibly other publications might seek copies of these suggestions, and I desire to avoid them as well as The Haserot Co. inconvenience.

Yours very truly,
Paul Haserodt.

Honey Crop is Abundant This Year—The Best Kind to Sell.

The large crops of high quality honey produced in Michigan, Iowa, New York and Texas have made it possible for the packers of Airline Honey to place this product on the market on an extensive scale during the coming winter. Bountiful crops of honey have been produced all over the country, and the A. I. Root Co., of Medina, Ohio, has assumed the responsibility of distributing the great bulk of the available honey.

They have used a full-page ad. in the October "Ladies' Home Journal" and a full-page ad. in "Good Housekeeping" and considerable space in similar publications. The result is beginning to show in Philadelphia, as their agents, the Frank A. Smith Co., and the branch house of the A. I. Root Co. are crowded with orders for future delivery. The home office at Medina, Ohio, has made arrangements for handling the trade. It is practically certain that Philadelphia will be well supplied with honey during the coming winter.

No. 386.—Making Credit Sales With Strings to Them.

All sorts of schemes are constantly being tried for the purpose of tying a string to credit sales of merchandise, fixtures, and store appliances. The string is intended to be held in the hand of the seller, who if the buyer goes bankrupt or anything like that, can pull it in and bring the goods away with it. Of course these schemes are used only when the buyer doesn't pay cash for what he buys. The purpose is to retain title in the seller to whatever is sold, so if anything happens he can claim the property as against the creditors of the buyer.

Naturally the creditors of the buyer are the chief objectors to all these schemes, for if they have sold a retail dealer a bill of goods on the strength of his apparent possession of several thousand dollars' worth of fixtures or store appliances, they hate to hear, when they go in to force the collection of their unpaid bills, that the fixtures and appliances are only leased; that "title has remained in the seller," and that all the security they thought they had when they granted the credit, has disappeared over night.

Almost every seller of fixtures, store appliances, and what not—sometimes even merchandise—who is not paid at once in cash, tries some scheme of retaining title in himself so that the buyer's creditors cannot step in and seize the property to satisfy their claims. The law has been hard pressed to protect both the seller and the buyer's creditors in this situation, without permitting either class to perpetrate an imposition on the other. It is freely admitted that a seller who has not been fully paid, and who has no other security, should retain legal title to what he has sold, so that he can seize it if the buyer falls down on his payments. Always provided that no deception is practiced on the buyer's creditors. Naturally the latter would assume that the property in question was one of the buyer's assets, being in his possession, and might give him credit on the strength of it. The law says, therefore, that if this scheme is to work, some way of notifying the buyer's creditors that the property doesn't belong to him must be adopted. Sometimes the law is not able to carry this out, but it has carried it out in a number of States by passing a statute requiring the seller who sells anything through a contract which endeavors to retain title in himself, to put that contract on record, so that the creditors of the buyer can go and look it up before they sell him anything. If no contract is on file, the law allows them to presume that the property is the buyer's. This law is being passed in one State after another and it is a good thing. It protects everybody.

I said a while ago that some people were even trying to sell merchandise under a contract retaining title in themselves until the bill was paid. A very interesting case involving the right to do this was decided last week by the United States Court of Appeals. A manufacturer of rubber goods sold a certain concern, on long time, some goods, "which would remain the property of the seller until sold to bona fide customers in the usual course of business." The buying concern was not merely agent, it was actually buying the goods, as the contract showed, for it was not held to any accounting as an agent would be. Moreover, the goods were mixed up with other goods in the buyer's stock.

The buying concern did not get along, and finally went into bankruptcy. The rubber manufacturer then promptly came around and started to pick out of the bankrupt stock everything that had come from him. This on the theory that under the contract "title had remained in him." The creditor interfered and the court, after some protracted litigation, said the manufacturer had no right to do any such thing. Under the facts, the court held the goods to be the real erty of the bankrupt, in spite contract, and they were given creditors. The court said:—

> Here, not only was the age buyer permitted to mingle the signed goods with his own but the contract expressly pro that the seller would furnish buyer "free of charge all samp tires and accessories and nece advertising matter, imprinted the name and address of the bu It is difficult to see how the could have more actually hel buyer out to its customers a real owner of the consigned erty. To permit them to r from the stock of the bankrup remaining portion of the cons goods, would, in our opinion erate as a fraud on the credito the bankrupt.

Where the seller, under st arrangement, has known, must, that anybody seeing the erty in the buyer's poss would think that it belonged t

Hence when I checked ıst this check, there was not s sufficient to pay same. With- notice to me the check was pro- d, which has caused me quite of trouble and extra expense. y jobber demanded that I send certified checks after this ened. My standing was A-1 this jobber before this. Will please tell me how to proceed to state myself with this jobber? —I also wish to know what s to take in another case. I had ay quite a lot of money as se- y for a friend. Another friend was tied up in part of this with loaned me some money on my onal note. Later I proposed let- this friend have part of my . He would not allow me what ought the land was worth. I ed to take the price he offered me, he allowing me two years to redeem land at same price with interest at 6 per cent., or selling all or part of said land for more than he agreed to pay me and dividing profit. He now refuses to allow me to sell. I can get 100 per cent. more for part of it and 50 per cent. for another part. I only have my wife as a witness to his saying I could redeem all or part of it or if I could sell all or part for more and divide profits. I have no writing to show, only his promise before myself and wife. He only gave me $40 per acre. I have a friend who will give me $100 per acre for 12 acres if I can redeem it, but will not offer but $80 if the profits have to be divided; and another party will give me $60 per acre for 25 acres. Will you kindly let me know what to do and how? I am a cripple, not able to do but very little work. Would like to save my little home.

Answer.—1—If the bank lost your check it is guilty of negligence and responsible in damages to you for any injury which happened as the result of that negligence. Apparently it should be easy to prove that the bank received it, because it received something else sent in the same envelope.

The damage to you seems to be impairment of credit, which is vital. I should be much tempted to sue the bank here.

As to restoring your credit with your jobber, I should write him a full statement of the facts, and should support it with a letter from the person who gave you the check which was lost. He should say in this letter that he gave you the check on a certain date and that it it has not turned up, showing evidently that it was lost. No reasonable jobber would refuse to believe this story.

2—I think you can compel the holder of your property to consent to your selling it. I assume that you deeded the property to him and it is now in his name. I should go into court with a petition reciting the fact of the conveyance to him, why that conveyance was made, the agreement under which it was made, and that you now have the opportunity to sell at a higher price than $40 per acre, but the holder refuses to carry out his contract. It will be the word of two witnesses (you and your wife) against his, and there should be no difficulty in convincing a court that the truth is on your side.

In some States there is a law requiring agreements of this sort to be in writing, but my impression is that Virgiania has no such law. But such agreements ought always to be in writing, law or no law.

Sweating Fruit May Violate Law.

Growers and shippers of oranges and grapefruit are making many inquiries of the United States Department of Agriculture in reference to what action will be taken by the Department during the coming season toward preventing the shipment into interstate commerce of immature citrus fruits which have been artificially colored by sweating. The officials in charge of the enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act state they will be guided in their action by the position of the Department previously announced, to the effect that the shipment in interstate commerce of immature oranges and grapefruit, which are sweated either before shipment or en route, is a violation of the Food and Drugs Act when the sweating conceals inferiority by making unripe fruit appear to be ripe. The sweating process turns the green color of the unripe fruit to yellow, and fruit so treated has the appearance of being ripe. However, extensive investigations by the Department have shown that the sweating process does not ripen the immature fruit. One of the tests to determine whether or not an orange is mature is the so-called "eight-to-one test." This test is based on the ratio of the soluble solids to the acid contained in the juice of the orange. The soluble solids increase as the oranges ripen, while the acid decreases. The oranges are considered immature until the juice contains soluble solids equal to or in excess of eight parts to each part of acid contained in the juice. The amount of soluble solids in orange juice is about equivalent to the amount of sugar it contains. The ratio of the sugar to the acid in the juice determines the sweetness of the orange. In the case of grapefruit, maturity is indicated by a ratio of seven parts of soluble solids in the juice to one part of acid. If oranges do not meet this test they are considered immature, and if colored by sweating, then it is considered that inferiority is concealed.

A Kid With the Makings.

I want to tell you about a store boy I know. He's head of the store boy department in a store out in Germantown. How many boys in the department? One, but it's some department all the same. I've seen him about there for a year or so but I never paid any attention to him except to notice that he was the most solemn-looking little cuss I ever saw. I suppose he's about sixteen years old, and he always seemed to be busy at something or other.

Last week I struck the store around lunch hour, when there wasn't anybody about but him and one clerk. So I started to talk to him.

"Well, kid," I said, "how's business?"

"Business is all right," he said, "if it was run right."

What d'ye know about that?

"Run right, what d'ye mean by run right?" I said.

"The boss ain't got any guts," he said. "He lets these women pull his leg all the time."

Polite little kid, ain't he?

"Can't say no to anybody," he said. "They come in here and work him all the time—say something he sent 'em wasn't right and make him take something off. One woman's a regular terror. She come in last week and said some chops we sent her was tough and nobody could eat 'em. Said she wouldn't pay for 'em! Why didn't she bring 'em back? I'll bet she ate every one of 'em."

"Did he let her get away with it?" I asked.

"Sure! He'd let her get away with anything. She ain't any good customer—never buys anything good and always putting up a kick over something. I'd tell her to go to ———!"

(Regular Sunday School boy).

"Yes you would not," I said. "Not if it was your store. Customers ain't so easy got."

"But she ain't any good!" he said. "I'll bet we don't make a cent off her."

"Say, Frank," he said, calling the clerk across the store, "did you see what Bill did down cellar?"

"No, what did he do?"

"He let the molasses run over out of something and never cleaned it up. Fearful mess—why don't the boss make him clean it up? It's rotten down there."

"He did tell him to," said Frank.

"Tell him to! Gee!" said the kid. "Don't he know Bill never does nothing on a telling. He ought to take him by the back of the neck and kick him down cellar! Leavin' a mess like that is."

"This store gets so rotten dirty before night comes it makes me sick!" said the kid. "The boss don't see dirt less you rub it on his face. Gee!"

"You seem to have a grouch, old sport," I said. "What's eating you—liver on the bum?"

"Nothin's eatin' me," he said, "only I can't stand for it. Goes on all the time about business being rotten and then he ain't taking care of what he's got. Store's so blame dirty nobody wants to come in it!

"Mrs. Jackson get her meat, Frank?" he called across to the clerk again.

"Search me," said Frank. "Didn't you take it up?"

"I ain't been give any meat to take up," he said. "I'll bet a thousand boss forgot all about it. He told her he'd have it there sure by 12 o'clock. It's quarter of one now. There'll be ——— to pay there!"

Just then the boss came in.

"Say boss, Mrs. Jackson's meat go up?" he said.

"Oh, Lordy no!" he said. "I clean forgot about that. You run right up with it. What time is it? Tell her we had to wait till some better meat came in."

You'd have died to see that kid's mug as he looked at me. He dassn't say anything, but it was all he could do to keep shut. When he came back to go out he came by me again and said "Ain't it ———?"

Now, I want to tell you. That kid, grimy little cusser as he is, is a better business man than his boss. And the chance is that if you watch him a little he could run that store better. He's got the makings, and don't you forget it. He sees things—sees 'em the way the customer would. That's worth a heap in business—in fact it's more than half. A lot of storekeepers can't see a blamed thing, even though it's right under their nose.

That's the reason I got up that idea—you remember that—to have some outsider come in the place once in a month and look things over.

If that kid ain't spoiled, he'll make good all right, you take it from me.

THE STROLLER.

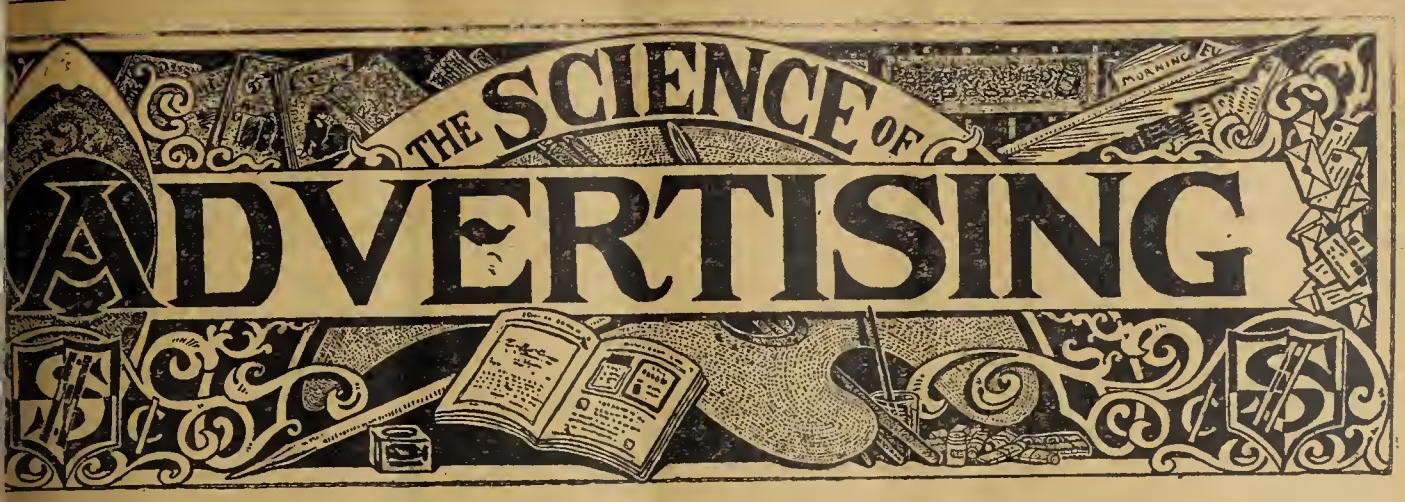
Brooms On the Way Up.

All Manufacturers Will Sharply Advance Prices This Fall. Broom Corn Scarce and Manufacturing Costs High. Advance Mostly on Lower Grades.

Brooms appear to be on the advancing list. Broom manufacturers say that the data recently compiled by the United States Government on broom manufacturing has convinced them that they have been selling their brooms too cheap for ten years. This because of the inadequate methods they used of figuring cost.

Now that the majority of broom manufacturers are alive to the true situation, they say they find it not only necessary to increase their selling price to cover costs as the under normal conditions, bu the advance of from fifteen eral hundred per cent. in ma that it is absolutely necessary vise prices in keeping with vance of materials.

Aside from the slightly prices which would be ne even under normal conditi substantial advance in broom this fall and winter is sure to into effect by those manufa who are able to remain in ness.



For the past two years th of broom corn has steadi creased and the consumpti brooms from all appearanc steadily increased. The equ point has been reached and with the result that the surplu of broom corn in the United has been used up, forcing ma turers to depend on the shor of this season.

With a demand greater th supply there can be only one and that is evidenced by the h broom corn market record many years, and it is problem whether all manufacturers w able to get enough corn to their needs.

In all probability the advan be largely on the lower grad well as lower priced brooms, are generally sold too near c production, and ofttimes The better grades give the de wider margin of profit and th sumer longer and more satisfa wearing service.

could make a lot of improve- t in the typographical appear- of this circular, but I am frank ay that that would not neces- ly improve results. It would l to, but a poor typographical earance does not always kill an ertisement. I have known some s where it has absolutely done but not in all. I would increase size of the heading, and set the heads in type that was not so k. That black, heavy letter is much of a contrast with the nce of the advertisement.

o much for the typographical of it. So far as the text is con- ned, the only thing I can sug- t is that the offers would have n very greatly strengthened by ning the brands. Is it by design t not one brand, except Ritter's mentioned? Cocoa, mustard, fee, cornflakes, oatmeal, matches, sins, canned pineapple—all pre- sumably package brands, yet not one mentioned. I cannot conceive of any reason for this, while as I see it there is every reason against it. It is much more alluring and impressive to say Genuine Wilbur's Cocoa, or Genuine Baker's, or whatever it is, than it is to say "cocoa." Of course it may be Mr. Hertzog's private brand; if so I should say that. There is a very great deal of strength in offering specific, identified things. Even if the brand was obscure, I should name it—any name is better than no name. The consumer won't necessarily think, because she has never heard of it before, that it is no good. And if it is not obscure—if it is a well known advertised brand—there is all the more reason why it should be mentioned.

Note.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. Preventing Wormy Chestnuts.

Worminess in chestnuts can be avoided in large measure, say entomologists of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, if the nuts when gathered are promptly fumigated with carbon bisulphid, all trace of which should be removed after fumigation by exposing the nuts to air. They also may be treated successfully with hot water, or subjected to dry heat in a kiln or oven. These measures destroy minute eggs and young grubs, unobjectionable on the whole, but which may later develop into worms and ruin the nuts. In any case, however, nuts should be carefully examined and defective nuts sorted out as completely as possible. Such treatment is especially important to those who ship chestnuts in interstate commerce, as such shipments, if wormy, fall foul of the Food and Drugs Act, which defines a food product to be adulterated if it consists in whole or in part of a filthy, decomposed or putrid animal or vegetable substance. In past seasons several consignments of moldy and wormy chestnuts have been seized on recommendation of the Department of Agriculture. Shippers would do well, therefore, to employ the measures recommended by the entomologists, because the eggs and minute grubs, unless destroyed before shipment, may develop in transit and thus ruin nuts apparently in sound condition when shipped.

A Peanut Butter Machine

will put you in a class by yourself—it will take you out of the ordinary and make your store headquarters for peanut butter, and you know you quickly sell other things once you have the people in your store. The A. W. Straub Co., of 3722 Filbert street, Philadelphia, makers of the Quaker City Peanut Butter Mill, will send you one on thirty days' trial. Become a manufacturer and see the difference in your profits.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can possibly sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Making People Eat More Codfish

If you have an idea that codfish is codfish, you are as wrong as you can be. There are as many grades of codfish as there are of butter.

There is all the difference in the world between Gorton's Codfish and some codfish we could show you, which is perfectly pure.

Any one of your customers could detect this difference. Perhaps they have detected it and stopped using the codfish you have been selling them.

If all the codfish was like Gorton's, the consumption of codfish would increase five fold. Gorton's Codfish is pure, old-fashioned codfish of the finest quality money can buy. You can sell more of it than you can sell of any other brand, because more people will want it, and all that want it will want more of it. Your jobber.

Westfield Standard Fight Made Hotter By Article in "McClure's" on Getting Allyn

Makes Ugly Charges Against Curtice Bros., of Rochester. Article Attempts to Hold Up Allyn as Exemplar of Food Purity. Curtice Bros. Make No Answer to Charges, But Doubtless Could Do So.

This paper has devoted some attention during the last few months to the criticism of the Westfield standard of food purity, which has become rather loud in certain quarters. The Westfield standard emanated from some investigations originally made by the Westfield, Mass., Normal School, in which Lewis Allyn taught chemistry. In the course of his class work, he discovered that many foods were adulterated and he devised a sort of code of honesty and purity in food products, which came to be called the Westfield standard. Eventually this became corrupted into an advertising scheme by certain New York publishers, who took both Allyn and the Westfield standard up and exploited them in all sorts of ways, chiefly as a means of getting advertising. Finally criticism arose, and Allyn got out of the school and out of the Westfield Board of Health. He and his Westfield standard were then taken bodily over by the publishers referred to, but there is still the feeling among the trade that the Westfield standard was something official, whereas it never was official, but was simply a standard of food purity—a very good standard, in the main—adopted arbitrarily by somebody in Westfield.

During the last few months the criticism of the scheme as an advertising proposition pure and simple has become louder and louder. It has emanated from the American Chemical Society and from charges filed by a Massachusetts State Senator with the Federal Trade Commission, and from other sources. An effort has been made to stem the tide, but it has not been very successful. The latest effort takes the form of an article in the current "McClure's Magazine" on "Getting Allyn," which is a long history of the many excellencies of Allyn and how the wolfish food adulterators have planned for years to destroy him. Naturally the article is biased and distorted. There is nothing new in it except an attack on Curtice Bros., of Rochester, N. Y., manufacturers of Blue Label Ketchup. In part this is as follows:—

> Sometime along in 1910 a strange thing happened to Nelson H. Armington, who had New England for Curtice Brothers Co., the firm that makes Blue Label Ketchup. For some little time before their business had been falling off in Westfield. It seems that the grocers there were giving up using the Curtice stuff because their catsup had benzoate of soda in it. The company had had complaints from their traveling men about the falling off of business there. So Armington slipped out to Westfield to see what was going on.
> This benzoate of soda was the stuff that Dr. Wiley found was bad for you, because in the first place it was bad for you itself, a kind of slow-acting drug, if you kept taking it; and still more because some of the preservers used it to keep partly decayed stuff in shape until it could be eaten. The Remsen board had said that theoretically you might take small doses of it in catsup into your system without being injured by the chemical itself. And so the Government had been held off. But most of the good concerns were giving it up—especially after the National Canners' Association came out against it.
> But a lot of little fellows, and this big concern, the Blue Label people out in Rochester, kept using it. They were going to use it as long as they wanted to. There was nothing actually disgusting in it, as some people said. In the early days it had been made out of horse urine, but now it is practically all made they say, out of coal tar.
> Armington went out to Westfield a town of about 15,000 or 20,000 people, and he saw the trade there, and they told him about this Allyn who taught chemistry in the State Normal School and was back of all this thing as a member of the Town Board of Health.
> He (Allyn) let the girls make the experiments themselves, and then turned them loose, so they could tell all the rest of the women that there were these chemicals in their food. Of course, it was only this one little place, but it was getting pretty serious there. The women were talking all over town and one women had sent back a case of Curtice stuff to a local grocer. So Armington went up and saw this man Allyn. One of the grocers took him up there.
> He met this smallish, smooth-faced man, with a fresh complexion and gray hair brushed up high, the way small men quite often do; and a formal way of talking—as a high school principal sometimes talks, or a professor in a small college. He was in a big chemical laboratory there at the school, and off in another room there was an exhibit of package goods on shelves—those with chemicals in them on one side, and those without them on the other. And the Blue Label Ketchup was with those containing the chemicals. You could see right away how the thing would hurt trade in the town.
> So after Allyn had shown him around awhile, Armington went over to where the goods without the chemicals were, and said:—
> "I can see this as a good thing for these people, being over here on these shelves—good advertising for them."
> "Maybe," said the little fellow. He wasn't very talkative.
> "About how much," said Armington then, "is it worth to them? About how much would it cost to have Blue Label Ketchup taken off that place there—and put over there?"
> "It would cost a damned sight more money than Curtice Brot own," said the little man, "fla up, and talking mad.
> Armington saw he couldn't anything with him.

This of course is a decidedly charge. In fact the insinuati that Curtice Bros' represen tried to bribe Allyn. This has no idea that anything o sort happened, and we don't actly see why Curtice Bros. come out and say so. This addressed a letter to the Roc concern and asked them to mak publication the answer whic had no doubt they could They have not done so, but w have no doubt that they can and we greatly regret that have not seen fit to do it.

Bureau of Standards Says Thousands Gasoline and Oil Pumps Are Giving Short Measure

Has Launched a Campaign to Stop It. Apparent That Trouble Lies With the User Rather Than With the Pu Some Wise Observations From a Well-known P Manufacturer.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
October 27, 1916.

The Bureau of Standards has begun a campaign against gasoline and oil pumps which give short measure. The department says that consumers of kerosene and gasoline are defrauded of enormous sums of money every year by getting short measure. These products are very largely sold by measuring pumps to-day, and the most of the trouble is blamed on them.

The department's campaign is the direct result of complaints of many kinds from all over the country, charging that the quality of gasoline was such as to lead to a strong suspicion of adulteration, and that short measure was so prevalent as to seem almost a matter of course. Impure gasoline is usually produced by adding kerosene, while short measure also may come deliberately or as the result of innocently using a gasoline measuring pump that becomes inaccurate.

No charge is made by the department that any oil pump manufacturers have had any part in the fraud; it is admitted that either the pump has accidentally gotten out of order and is giving short measure out the dealer's knowledge; being deliberately manipulate dishonest retailers. Ho

NOTE.—Touching the above of the best-known gasoline p manufacturers in the country tributes to this paper the follo truthful observations:—

> The inaccuracies in measur pumps is due about nine times out of ten not to the pump, the man who operates it. It's an adage that runs, "Figures won't but liars will figure." This app in some particulars to measur pumps.
> There is only one way that t can be avoided, and that is for so organization or some agency, least, to stir up either the munici State or Federal Government to point where the sealers of weig and measures will be required seal all measuring devices and periodically inspect them. In a f instances the sealers of weights a measures will seal measuring a weighing devices, but in the gre majority of instances, they around to look over the pump a put a sticker on it showing th they have looked at it, and go aw again.

Harrisburg, Pa., October 25, 1916.

NOTE.—This contributor asks for an opinion as to whether the practice of using a large tin half full, evidently with the idea that consumers will believe they are getting more than they are, is a violation of the food law. We believe that it is, without doubt. Anything which misleads a consumer as to quality or quantity is a violation of the law, and probably any court would say, upon seeing the single ounce of pepper in the 2¼-ounce tin: "You could not have had anything but a dishonest motive in doing this. It would have been easily possible to pack two ounces of pepper in the 2-ounce tin, or if you only wanted to sell one ounce, to use a 1-ounce tin for it." No consumer seeing this sealed 2-ounce tin would believe it was only half full. The printing of the words "one ounce net" in small type on the label does not cure the fraud, as the oversize tin speaks louder than the little letters on the label.—ED.

Credit Arrangement in Parsons, Kan.

> We, the following named merchants of the Parsons Retailers' Association, do hereby agree not to extend credit to any person without first getting his credit standing from the secretary's office, and should the information received reveal the fact that such person owes a fellow groceryman an unpaid bill and no satisfactory adjustment of the account has been made with the creditor, we further agree to absolutely refuse to extend credit to such prospective customer; we also agree to report any and all delinquents at least twice a month to the office of the secretary.

WITH THE EDITOR

An Incident With a Moral.

Here is an item from the Oregon "Retailers' Journal," which I am reproducing exactly as it appeared:

R. ALEXANDER SUFFERS FIRE LOSS.

The legion of friends of R. Alexander, renowned Round-Up booster and member of the Oregon Retail Merchants' Association, will regret to learn that on October 5th the Popular Cash Store of which he was proprietor, was almost totally destroyed by fire.

Mr. Alexander carried a stock of practically $24,000, while his insurance was only $13,000. The fire is said to have been caused by spontaneous combustion as a result of a quantity of coal stored in the basement of one of the buildings.

Mr. Alexander is a pioneer department store man of eastern Oregon, and is perhaps better known than any other merchant in the state and is universally popular among all classes of citizens and business men. He has for years been a loyal member of the State Association in which he has held honorable offices. He is also an enthusiastic member of the Knights of Pythius, and is Past Grand Knight of the Odd Fellows.

While it is very sad to his friends to learn of this recent disaster, yet those who know Mr. Alexander best also know that he has the enthusiasm and fortitude which will soon entirely mend his fortunes.

According to scant information available at the time of going to press, Mr. Alexander will immediately resume business in Pendleton. Others who suffered in the same conflagration were Bond Bros. and Douglas Belts.

What a moral this article and this picture teach! Here is a man certainly 60 or 65 years old, evidently well to do, as he carried a $24,000 stock. Fire comes and "almost totally destroys" his store.

Fire is always a dreadful thing for a going business. Even when the insurance completely covers the actual fire loss, it never covers the loss that comes from stoppage of business. But when the insurance is inadequate, the loss is double. Mr. Alexander, a seasoned merchant, thought it necessary to cover himself against only half of his possible loss. He loses $24,000, he can collect $13,000. I suppose his answer would have been, had he been asked why he didn't fully cover, "Oh, I would never make a total loss." But nevertheless, he did make a total loss, or very nearly so, and his confidence that something could not happen which has happened, loses him about $10,000.

Of course half insurance is better than none. But the man who cuts down his insurance protection below 100 per cent. to save money is like the Georgia cracker whose brilliant scheme to educate his mule to do without rations, worked beautifully until the mule chanced to die.

Advancing Prices and the Retailer's Profit.

In a recent issue I suggested that advancing markets such as we are having now were in the main good for the retailer, who was thereby enabled to adjust his profits. Take a market that for months or years maintains a dead level of price. If there is strenuous competition, the tendency of that price will be invariably down if it fluctuates at all.

Therefore it is a good thing when some general condition like the war shakes things loose and pushes prices up so that for a while at least the retailer has a chance of getting a profit.

The above is the substance of what I said a few weeks ago, but the New York "Tribune" doesn't like it. On its financial page last Sunday it took it up and insinuated that I had exposed some ugly secret of the grocer—the fact that he welcomed advancing prices so he could increase his profit. But, I ask, increase his profit from what? In many cases from a hopelessly inadequate figure. It is not to increase an already fair profit, for competition has reduced the average retailer's profit in many lines to less than nothing. What does he make on sugar? On flour? On many package goods?

The "Tribune" will please keep out of it. It knows nothing of the retail grocer's struggle and of course it looks at the matter as a consumer. To the consumer everybody else's profit is rank poison.

Read This Twice and Then Act on It.

There is a lot of sense in the "Stroller's" argument this week—that in these days of high prices the grocer should work with his customers to show them what they can still buy at reasonable prices.

Not only could a grocer, by doing this, weld his customers to him by ropes of steel, but he could perform a real service. Take a family whose income is $20 a week, and which has become used to eating meat several times a week. To-day meat is bad for those people first because it absorbs too much of their income, and second, because they probably eat too much for their physical good. But how many grocers have the initiative to show them how they can switch to some substitute for meat?

If I were a grocer I would push the high-priced things to the background all I could and specialize on the moderate-priced things. I can guarantee to go into almost any home to-day, except the most poverty stricken, and cut down the cost of food. I would cut out steak and roast beef and substitute rice croquettes and corn fritters made from canned corn. With some families the process would cut their c a fourth, with some it would even more, and with all it would cost some. They might not like new food as well as the old, but would like the saving, and the food would probably be better them.

More About the Westfield Standard.

There is more about the W field food standard in this is The Westf standard is portant to e retailer and e jobber because many manufactu —not so many now as former sell their brands as conform with it. They exploit it as a g asset, and it is therefore impor to know just what the Westf standard amounts to.

For this reason this paper given some space to the discuss which has been waged for s months over the legitimacy of Westfield standard.

Any bona fide standard of f purity is good, and the Westf standard is without doubt a g standard. But it is a fraud to t the arbitrary standard of one m like Lewis Allyn, give it a disti ive name like the "Westfield sta ard," and then exploit it in suc way that it will seem like an offi standard which every manufactu would have to conform to or under reproach. Manufactur who conform to State and Fede food standards are doing all th can be expected to do.

The Westfield standard has months been nothing more than private business enterprise, conc trating upon getting advertising certain magazines.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Store Pride.—Believe in it. Believe that it is the best store in your town. Believe that you offer the best goods, the best service, the best everything. That's how you ought to feel and how you must feel if you intend to win out. Forget competitors. Forget the stores you hear about, better prices and better quality. I say forget them as far as the customer is concerned. Make little of any comment. But tell it all to the manager or to the boss. Let them regulate matters.

"We're Out of That."—The buyer isn't born yet that can forever keep every item on sale. Deals are constantly on. Direct or indirect shipments with an extra discount may be on the way. So when you're out of a good seller for a little while, let the thing down easy. Don't criticise anybody. Do say in an off-hand way, "We're out that!" You can by a little explanati make an agreeable substitute. T point is that no reflection must be c on the buyer for your store. "Ther a reason."

Break away from what the other fellow did or does. The men that are worth while are the men that strike out. We need them in our business.

"What's the Use."—That's an awful thing to say. Don't ever allow such an expression to cross your lips. "What's the use." Why, man alive, everything is the use. Every honest effort, every clean thought, every attempt to improve to-day's work over yesterday's is getting ahead. "Thoughts are things," and you'll land just about as low as you think you'll land and just about as high as you intelligently prepare for.

Fill Up the Store.—That is, make good displays of canned goods and package cereals. It looks like business. It looks as though there was "something doing." Besides, it improves the store. It takes away the barrenness. It's a cheerful look. Hopeful and helpful and prosperous look. Over and above this it shows that you are on the job.

Be True to Your Customer.—It isn't smart to misrepresent things. It's smart to be able to talk them. It pays to be true to your customer. It pays morally and financially. If a woman finds the canned pineapple or the leg of lamb or the dozen of oranges just what you said, you've very likely won her. You made the sale purely on merit. The credit is yours. But don't on your life describe woody pineapple "delicious," nor mutton "young lamb," nor seconds California oranges "sweet and juicy."

1915 Norway Mackerel For Sale.

The Mons Isaksen, Inc., advertise 1915 Norway mackerel for sale again in this issue, emphasizing the fact that they have never represented it to be anything but 1915 fish. Touching the difficulty experienced in getting the Norwegian Government to allow this mackerel to leave the country, the home office of Isaksen in Stavanger, Norway, write as follows:—

Mackerel.—You may think it was very easy to get permit to ship this goods to America, but I have had very much trouble in getting this settled. When I shipped the first 500 barrels on the "Bergensfjord" I had not received the permit when the steamer left Stavanger on Monday afternoon, but anyhow, I succeeded in getting the goods on board by giving the custom officials and Captain Irgens a written guarantee that he could start to unload the goods Wednesday morning at 7 o'clock in Bergen if he did not have the permit at that time. Tuesday afternoon I received it, and the goods went off to dear old New York. Exactly the same thing happened down to Kristiansand to ship the next 500 barrels on the "Kristianiafjord." Then I first received a telegram saying I could not ship the goods, after the steamer had left the town with the goods on board, but at last I got a permit on account of the conditions Tuesday afternoon at 6 o'clock, just in the last minute.

Regarding the remaining lot I went in to Kristiania and stayed eight days to try and get this out, and the writer did everything, it looked pretty dark and was for a long time absolutely refused. At last we got a permit for 1,500 barrels Friday afternoon, and had a hard job to get the goods ready for shipment, as the boat leaves Kristiansand on Sunday and Stavanger on Monday at noon. We are now negotiating about the remaining 505 blls., and I certainly would be glad to be able to ship also this lot. It consists of the following numbers: 12/1, 193/2, 150/3, 100/4 and 50/5. It certainly is fine that we are the only shippers of mackerel this year.

Chain Store Manager Held for Scale Fixing.

In a Justice Court at Richmond, Va., last week, the manager of the local branch of the Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. was found guilty of tampering with the scales in the store to make them give one ounce short weight, and fined $20. A former inspector for the company testified that the manager of the concern had confessed that he had fixed the scales so that they would cheat. P. M. Bealer, general superintendent of all the company's stores, told the court that the company issued strict orders to its branch managers to give honest weight. The case has been appealed.

The Case of a Grocer Who Sold Cheap Jar Rings

A certain retailer looked at samples of jar rings. He could buy a ring which he could sell at a profit at 5 cents, and he could buy a ring that he could sell profitably at 10 cents.

He argued: "I don't believe my customers would pay 10 cents for jar rings—everything else is so high. I guess the 5-cent rings are all right."

Thereupon he bought the cheaper jar rings, which looked as good as the others to the average person. These cheap rings he sold to women who did their own canning—women whom he prized as customers, women whose trade was profitable to him.

One woman lost thirty-six jars of peaches because the rings, being made of old, poor rubber, cracked and shrunk. You can figure out whom she blamed for it, and whether his excuse, "I wanted to save you money," had much weight with her.

Good Luck jar rings can't be profitably retailed at 5 cents, but they will never lose thirty-six jars of peaches for any woman. They are made of rubber so fresh and fine that it will last from season to season without deterioration.

Remarkable Canned Goods Situation Told by Packer. Export of Wheat Falls Off. Cottonseed Oil Advance a Factor. English Demand Add Five Cents to Butter and Egg Market. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, October 27, 1916.

Mr. Fred. L. Dutton, of the Grafton-Johnson Canning Co., of Indiana, one of the large and prominent concerns of the Middle West, was in this city and gave out the following statement regarding the condition of the canned goods markets:—

Conditions are bad as to total production and will be felt severely in the next nine months. Laboring men are the heaviest buyers, as the wealthier classes are not heavy consumers of canned goods. There is a general shortage of all descriptions. Speculation has not yet seriously entered into the situation, but it may come later when speculators begin to appreciate the seriousness of the situation and the probable actual shortage by next spring. Canners are not delivering on an average more than 60 per cent. of their bookings, and the retailer will feel the pinch later. For the present he is well supplied, having bought ahead for the next several months, and so is not forcing the consumer to pay the full levels which these wholesale prices justify. When his present stocks run out, however, and he is forced to replenish he will then be up against it, and will be obliged to charge the consumer prices that will cause widespread complaint.

The demand at present is greater in the manufacturing districts, where high wages are prevalent and where the workers have not been accustomed to such good living as they are now experiencing. They are spending freely and the demand from these sections has been overwhelming.

There may, however, be a reaction in the next forty or sixty days, due to the fact that every jobber is now well stocked with deliveries that have been made on the basis of old prices, and who see nothing attractive in the present price levels, and will refrain from making further purchases until forced to. A good deal of the present price inflation comes not from buying by jobbers, but from buying between canners who are short on their contracts, and perhaps by some jobbers who are short here and there on their contracts with the retailers. There may be, and probably are, some irresponsible packers who will curtail deliveries and hold back supplies in the hope of higher prices until the trade is all filled up, and then may have to let go at a decline, thus temporarily at least upsetting the market. In other words, the advance has run ahead of the demand for the present, but it will adjust itself later.

This is a general shortage and affects everything; for instance, there is not only a shortage in tomatoes, but also in corn and peas and everything right down the line, so that it is not possible to divert the demand from one article to another.

This is not such a terrible state of affairs when you come right down to it. For the past five or six years market conditions have been against packers and jobbers, who have often sold close and taken a loss. I can recall when tomatoes sold at $1.25 and $1.30 and nobody complained. We never thought of peas at less than 90 cents to $1, yet they have since been down to 50 cents. As a packer I am glad to see this advance, which I believe will be good for two years to come. Packing costs are greater than for many years. I look for vegetables to be high for a long time. The farmer is expecting to see $2 wheat and $1 corn prices, articles that can be farmed with little difficulty. But the farmer who sees his neighbor making such profits from his acreage and who is getting high prices for potatoes will require considerable persuasion to plant tomatoes, peas and sweet corn that require careful cultivation and are hazardous crops at best.

An interesting feature of the local situation is that exports of American foodstuffs, particularly breadstuffs, have shown a remarkable reduction during the last nine months. During the nine months of the previous year the export of breadstuffs, which means wheat, amounted to $410,000,000. During the nine months just past it amounted to $320,000,000, or a loss of 22 per cent. Of course the exports of wheat are still enormous in spite of the decline.

The cottonseed oil situation has become very critical, and it is important to the general trade, because cottonseed oil enters into many articles which are in everyday use, principally soaps and cooking compounds. On Wednesday last the cottonseed oil market here, which is the center of the cottonseed oil industry of the country, made a new high record which, however, was afterward followed by a break. The advance in cottonseed oil in the last few weeks has been phenomenal. Lard has advanced and this brings

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market has shown no change during the week, but the situation is gradually getting stronger and it seems impossible to buy anything cheap to-day. This does not mean that prices are inordinately high, they are relatively much lower than other products when compared with normal.

Coffee.

The coffee market is to a certain extent in the hands of speculators, and a number of fractional changes during the week have come from speculators almost entirely. The market for actual coffee is not materially changed, and is rather easy than otherwise on account of weaker news from Brazil. The demand is very light. Mild coffees are still very cheap and unchanged. In spite of their extreme cheapness, nobody seems to be paying very much attention to them. Java and Mocha unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

The sugar market has advanced again during the week and raws have been sold as high as 6.52 cents. Refined is ranging now from 7.50 to 7.75 cents for granulated. The present situation is extremely strong. It will continue so for a few weeks. Domestic beet granulated is not figuring, although it is being offered in the Middle West or as far East as Pittsburgh and Buffalo at 20 to 30 points under the Eastern market. Cuban sugar at the moment is scarce, and not until the new grinding season begins will any relief come from the present high prices.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose has advanced 20 points more during the week, making 40 points in two weeks and is for the moment out of the market. The largest manufacturers of package compound syrup have withdrawn prices and are having difficulty in filling their orders. The compound syrup situation is extremely strong. Sugar syrup and molasses are unchanged and quiet at more than normal prices.

Fish.

The market for Irish autumn caught mackerel has advanced on the other side about $2 a barrel, and this fish would, therefore, cost on this side, in a large way, around $22. This is several dollars above normal. Shore mackerel are unchanged and in fair supply. Demand is active. Norway mackerel are still being offered and are being taken almost as rapidly. Cod, hake and haddock continue scarce and firm, with unchanged prices. Salmon steadily advances. pink salmon is 20 cents higher than opening price and red Alaska 25 c above the opening price. Horse salmon also advanced during the w Domestic sardines are firm and ten upward. Demand moderate. Impo sardines show no change. There still some Norwegian sardines co over.

Canned Goods.

Maryland 3s tomatoes have act sold during the week at $1.35, whi just about twice what they have for in years when the supply was very much greater than it is now. though some sales are being mad to-day's prices, the market is consid very dangerous. The present adv which is believed to have no basi the ordinary conditions of supply demand, is due almost entirely to fact that most of the current pack been sold from out of the pac hands. What a difference it m whose hands it is in is not clear, f exists in an unsold condition. H ever, this and the advancing market everything else are responsible for exorbitant prices. No change has curred in any grade of corn during week. The supply is small and p very much above normal. Peas are and unchanged. California ca goods grow firmer and peaches showing a rather heavy advance the opening. Other varieties of C fornia canned goods are not so m affected. Small Eastern staple ca goods are in a very disorganized dition, owing to light packs and co quent small supply, which amount exhaustion in some cases and very l prices. Spinach is being quoted at $1.25 in a large way, f. o. b. fact

Provisions.

Smoked meats are firm and changed, with the production somew heavier than it was a week ago, to the beginning of the killing sea There is a good demand and this kept prices from going lower. L is very firm at an advance of 1 to cents. There is very little lard in l markets and the packers anticipate h er prices during the next few we The speculative market in Chicago advanced nearly 100 points during week. Dried Fruits.

Prunes are still obtainable on a cent basis, but most packers are ask ½ a cent more than that. Peaches apricots are unchanged for the we Fancy seeded raisins show an adva of 1 cent. he develpoments of the week only firm our frequently expressed views that an advance in the prices of wheat was as irresistible as the tides of the ocean.

Argentina has shipped this week 1,792,000 bushels, as against 1,416,000 bushels last week. The shipments from Australia are larger this week, being 1,832,000, compared with 756,000 last week.

We should see a huge increase in the Australian shipments now that the British Government has set its hands to the task of moving it. It is expected that with a normal crop to be harvested in January, there will be an exportable surplus of 160,000,000 bushels, which will include the balance of the old crop. If this task is to be accomplished, we must expect the weekly shipments from now until August 1, 1917, to average 4,000,000 bushels. Not only is every bushel of this wheat needed, but in addition, the surplus of every other exporting nation. The surplus of Canada and the United States is going out at a very rapid rate, and by Christmas we will have exported all that we can safely spare, and afterwards we may expect a very acute situation to arise with millers and exporters scrambling for wheat.

We are sorry to say that we believe that prices must go considerably higher. We sincerely wish we could see cheaper prices ahead of us instead of higher ones, but when one views the wheat situation from a world's standpoint, there is no conclusion to draw other than that prices must be forced to a very materially higher level.

Imported Fish Specialties.

The herring market during the last week showed distinct signs of further improvement, both in regard to demand as well as in regard to price. The only exception was made by Holland herrings, which are not yet in the right demand, and prices are on a downward tendency, owing to very large supplies expected from Holland.

The demand for imported sardines continues excellent for all kinds. Norways are selling freely in spite of the steadily advancing prices and supplies of good fish are rather scarce. In Portugal the catch continues rather unsatisfactory and prices are tending higher. In France prices are high and very few parcels obtainable, but they are finding ready sale amongst the high-class trade.

STROHMEYER & ARPE CO.

Foreign Grocery Specialties.

Olive oil is in excellent demand. Prices are not only steady, but tending higher in spite of more favorable crop reports. Fine grades are particularly scarce at the present moment, because the new oil cannot possibly come into the market before the beginning of next year, and then the new oil is not suitable for the finest trade, because the new oil is always rather strong in the beginning of the season.

There is quite a scarcity of Japanese crab meat. New supplies cannot be obtained from Japan, and the fishing has ended and stocks here are very scarce, and prices have been advancing steadily and likely to go still higher.

There isn't a thing in our line that does not seem to be on the upward trend, and with all the increase in prices, the demand seems to grow continually larger. It isn't a question of trying to sell goods to-day, it is merely a question of being able to supply all that one is asked to deliver. In other words, orders are coming in more freely than supplies of goods with which to execute the orders.

How to Cut Ice Bills

Consumption of ice is just as important in a refrigerator in winter as in summer. It's one of the fixed charges of a business—one of the hardest items to reduce.

The Howe Refrigerator will reduce your ice consumption both summer and winter 20 per cent., and we aren't foolish enough to make a specific claim like that if we can't substantiate it.

The double air lock door which is exclusive with the Howe Refrigerator makes the 20 per cent. saving. Will you let us demonstrate this to you?

A New View of the Alarming Potato Shortage

A Contributor Who Evidently Knows Something of the Subject, Says it is General and is Due to the High Price and Consequent Non-use of Potash, a Needed Fertilizer. Says We Couldn't Get Potatoes from Abroad Even Without an Embargo.

As the potato situation received some notice in your issue of October 16th, I will try and give the reason for the present potato situation.

The world shortage, and it is a world shortage, of the potato crop is brought about largely by the scarcity of the one mineral salt, potash. Potash for fertilizer has up until 1915 come from Germany at a normal price of $35 to $40 per ton. Last spring potash was bringing above $500 per ton, prohibiting its use as a fertilizer.

Fertilizer for potatoes carries 8 to 10 per cent. of potash and is very essential in soils deficient of a clayey texture. Clay soils contain a fair percentage of potash salts and will produce fair crops of potatoes without the use of commercial fertilizers.

The non-use of commercial fertilizers carrying a good percentage of potash is largely responsible for the short crop of potatoes in all countries. The weather, too, was in part responsible for not only a short crop of potatoes, but many other crops as well; too much rain in some sections and too dry in others.

You say Great Britain and Ireland have a very good crop of potatoes as to quality and quantity. Not only has Great Britain and Ireland a very short crop of potatoes this season, but all countries that have in the past drawn on Germany for their supplies of potash have small crops.

There will be no potatoes for export this year from either country and very few were exported from the crop of a year ago. South America drew on the United States crop last spring at prices over $1 per bushel.

You have taken a "sling" at the Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C., because of the quarantine on potatoes from the above countries. Your editorial reads like a political slap at the Democrats.

Please remember that your subscribers are not all of one political faith, but what are the facts about this quarantine?

Some years ago because of the reported great yields of potatoes grown in Great Britain a few New England potato growers imported seed from the above countries, expecting thereby to secure greater yields in this country, and did import with the seed a disease known as potato wart or black scab, and until then unknown in this country.

Although we had for years imported potatoes from Great Britain and Ireland for cooking purposes and paid the 25 cents per bushel duty, it was not until the potatoes had been used for seed that the disease developed here.

The Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C., not only placed a quarantine on potatoes from foreign countries known to have the above disease, but placed a quarantine on shipments from a few of the countries in some of the New England States where the disease had developed.

The Department, after some effort, has now stamped out the disease and I believe all quarantines have been lifted at all points in the United States.

Well known butter and egg men here expressed the opinion that the enormous demand for butter from England has added at least 5 cents to the price, and has probably added 5 cents a dozen to the price of eggs, because England is buying an enormous quantity of our eggs also. Most of these eggs were bought last April for the British account and have been in storage ever since.

Here's a Stunt for You Grocers.

I got some fine and dandy news when I got home the other night.

"I want to tell you something," said my wife. "Things have got so high you'll have to give me more money to run this table."

"Help!" I said. "For the love of Mike! I been giving you more than I make for six months! I been stealing money to feed this family for months! I don't know where I can steal any more. If you've got to have any more you'll simply have to put dark specs on and let one of the kids lead you around the street with a 'Pity the poor blind fat woman' sign on."

"Well, that'll be all right about the poor fat woman sign," she said, "but I'll have to have more if you expect us to have enough to eat."

"Why don't you eat grass?" I said. "There's a bully little clump of green grass out there by the fence back of the house. Grass is all right with a little salt and pepper on. I'd a heap rather eat it than that spinach you feed up on every time you get a chance."

"It's all right," she said, "but you heard what I said. I had to pay more for potatoes and meat and milk and —and—and—and" (oh, a whole bunch of stuff).

"Ain't Simmons (our grocer) got anything cheap in his place?" I asked.

"If he has he don't show it to me," she said.

Now that's where Simmons is dead, plumb wrong. Here am I, a poor hard-working cuss making only $10,000 a year. I can only keep two cars, where I ought to keep three. My sixteen bulldogs eat more every minute. I'm up against it for food. And there's fifty million more like me, every one of 'em going to some grocery store every day. And not one grocer out of a thousand—get this, now—showing 'em how to cut down the cost of living.

Are you fellows sure you get that?

They take in orders for whatever comes along, and fill 'em, and hear complaints and complaints and complaints, and explain and explain and explain why everything is going up—and not a peep out of 'em to show their trade how to get around it.

Ain't that foolish?

I'll bet if I had time I could sit down right now and dope out a list of say twenty-five good things that are cheap. Rice is one of 'em, and there's a bunch more. Things people could live on! Nobody has to have meat—not a blamed bit of meat. They simply don't know how to get along without meat, that's all.

Wouldn't you think the rice people would jump in now and make a big boom on rice, with a lot of recipes how to cook it and all? Why they could make the biggest kind of a clean-up.

The Chinamen have it all over us in a lot of ways. By hookey, if things don't get better I'm a going on the road with one of them blue overall Chinese suits on and a pocket full of rice for my meals. I can get the suit for 75 cents and enough rice to last a day for a nickel. I'll bet I'd look good in a suit like that—something like a blue bolster, maybe, but I'd cut down the cost of living.

Well, to get back to what I was saying, if I was a grocer I'd push the list of 25 cheap things to the limit. I'd dope out how to cook 'em and I'd advertise 'em and have store demonstrations of 'em. "How Our Customers Can Cut Down the High Cost of Living." That would be the idea and you can bet your neck it would get across. People want it, and so far as I've been able to see, nobody's giving it to 'em.

Maybe the people wouldn't be grateful for some dope like that! Somehow a lot of 'em don't seem to have the sense to dope it out for themselves—of course they could do it, if they'd only get down to it. My wife don't do it. I asked her. I said, "Why don't you look around and dig up the things that ain't gone up and use more of them?"

"I don't know of any," she said. "Everything's gone up."

"No it ain't," I said. "Rice ain't, has it?"

"Well, we can't eat rice all the time, can we?"

"Don't have to," I said. "There's other things. Go to it and dig 'em up."

But they won't do it. They're used to a groove—meat so many times a week and so on and so on and so on. Somebody's got to show 'em, and it's up to the man that's selling 'em their stuff.

Why there's a little restaurant in Philly where I go once in a while when I'm at home. He's fixe what he calls a "vegetable dir —three vegetables and a po egg. The whole stunt is to something that don't cost muc get around meat. Why Ann girl that waits on me, tells me sell a power of them.

You bet your neck people grateful. I'd be grateful if ou Simmons would do that. I'd grateful I'd go over to his every time I'm home and sin him till 1 o'clock in the morni

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Having at various times had occasion to see the issues of your paper, I have, up to the present time, been under the impression that your editorials and quotations were as accurate market quotations as it might be possible for a trade paper to obtain, and comparing such with other editions, I have had a very f able opinion about your issues I notice in your issue of Oc 23d, on page 5, an article in re to Norwegian mackerel which, mit me to say, looks to me mor a paid advertisement than a r paper editorial.

Wants Help With Advertising.

Federalsburg, Md., Oct. 23, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Will you please tell me where I can get a book or magazine that would help me in writing up weekly circulars and local paper advertising headings. I am at sea as just how to start my headlines so as not to make the impression of a cut-price store; at the same time I would use a few specials. Any suggestions or help you can give me will be greatly appreciated by me.

Yours very truly,
F. W. LORD.

Saving a Scheme for Himself.

Wilkinsburg, Pa., Oct. 24, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I was saving a copy of the "World" in which there was a scheme and outline for his customers in paying their bills. While I was away a few days one of the boys cleaned up my office to the extent of making away with that paper. I would like to have a copy. It was in June, I think. The plan was an explanation of condition with discounts for accounts paid within the month, at the end of the month and, I think, interest added after a certain period. I was planning to put it in operation the first of the year.

Respectfully,
N. CROW.

The article referred to was published June 19, 1916, last, a copy of which has been sent to this correspondent.

Think About Your Refrigerator Now.

The fall and winter is the best time to buy your refrigerators, because the cost of ice is still fresh in your memory, and the cost of ice is the most important thing in connection with refrigerators. With many makes so much ice must be used that the cost is almost prohibitive. Here's where your thoughts should turn to the Howe Refrigerators, because they will save you about 20 per cent. of your ice bill (almost pays for a new refrigerator). Repeat that to yourself, "Save almost 20 per cent. of my ice bills." Doesn't that make you want to know more about them? It should! The Howe Scale Co. stand behind their refrigerators just as they do their scales. In Philadelphia, at 508 Market street.

Again in Season!

Fresh Sausage,
Scrapple,
Souse,
Liver Pudding

Burk's Fresh Sausage

Composed entirely of selected tender pieces of pork, not the ordinary trimmings commonly used. Not cheapened in price and quality by the addition of tripe, boiled rice and sundry substitutes. Correctly seasoned, not offensive to sensitive stomachs because of pungent herbs. Nutritious. In four styles—hashed fine and coarse, linked and in straight casings.

Burk's Philadelphia Scrapple

Prepared from the very best materials—good, wholesome meats and extra fine corn meal. Well boiled and seasoned to suit the most critical. Not to be compared with some cheap products of doubtful hues and colors. Burk's eats as good as it looks. Superior to farmers' products In pans of 15 pounds each.

Burk's Pig Souse

is a seasonable specialty prepared fresh daily, in pans of five pounds each. The jelly is clear and transparent and free from vegetable gelatines and ill-smelling glue stock. Contains plenty of meat and garnished with slices of lemon and parsley.

Proves attractive when turned out of the pan, and is a quick seller, saving the consumer the trouble of cooking pig's feet, so difficult to obtain at this season of the year.

Burk's Liver Pudding

Of the usual "Burk" standard—clean and unadulterated. Rich in quality and an excellent dish when fried, or, after removing the casing, hashed with potatoes. In rings of 1 pound each.

No. 387.—The Penalty for Speaking Falsely of a Competitor or of a Business Man Not a Competitor.

I have received the following through a Western paper:—

> I have read in magazines from time to time of the penalties for various legal offenses, but have never had the pleasure of reading what the penalty is, or should be, if one man should knowingly send out a false statement that would have a tendency to destroy the credit of another. For instance, I know a watchmaker and jeweler in a country town who is a master of his profession, has a jewelry store that is a credit to the town—in fact, the best store the town has ever had. His store is paid for and he discounts all his bills. Now if, knowing the facts as I do, I should publish the story that this man carries no stock, does not always pay his bills promptly and is only a practical workman, what is the penalty for such an offense, or what should it be? Are there any United States Supreme Court decisions applicable to such a case, or what is the law pertaining to such an offense?

This correspondent asks about a jeweler, but I suppose I need not say that the legal principles involved here are the same no matter what line it is.

The correspondent seems to have an idea that the offense he speaks of is in itself a criminal offense, separate and distinct from other libels. That is not the fact. Aspersing the credit of a solvent merchant, or his ability as a master of his craft is a civil offense, and it may even be a criminal offense, but it is merely one of the class of punishable libels or slanders.

There are three aspects of such an offense.

1—The criminal libel (or slander) aspect.

2—The civil libel (or slander) aspect.

3—Misuse of the United States mails.

Such an offense could offend against the law in all three respects. If it offends against the first and third it would be punishable with fine or imprisonment; if it offends against the second it would be penalized by the payment of damages.

If the defamatory statement is written, it is libel; if spoken only, it is slander.

Consider No. 1. I question very much whether the language which this correspondent sets forth would be criminal libel at all. A man may be guilty of criminal libel though he speaks only the truth. The theory is that criminal libel tends to a breach of the peace, and it is therefore immaterial whether the thing said is true or not. But even if false it must be something pretty strong—stronger than this, in my judgment.

As to No. 2, this might or might not be misuse of the mails, and a criminal offense under the United States laws. Sending through the mails any matter which is "libelous, scurrilous, defamatory, threatening, or calculated in any way to reflect injuriously upon the character or conduct of another," is misuse of the mails. But the matter must be exposed to the public gaze. If it is sealed inside of an envelope or a wrapper, it makes no difference how libelous it is, it is not misuse of the mails and the postal authorities will take no notice of it.

If this correspondent wrote the above on a postal card, he might or might not be guilty of misuse of the mails. I say he might not, because this language is a little weak for a criminal offense, in my judgment.

What this offense really is, is trade libel, a civil offense only. The law is pretty uniform about trade libel throughout the United States. Words which when spoken or written of an ordinary individual might not be slander or libel at all, would at once become so if spoken of a man in connection with his business, trade, profession or calling. A good definition of trade libel is—"any words spoken or written of a person in his office, trade, profession, business or means of getting a livelihood, which tend to expose him to the hazard of losing his office or position, or which charge him with fraud, indirect dealings, or incapacity." Such statements can be sued for even if no damage has occurred, because they tend to injure him in his trade, profession or business. In other words, the charge must be such that if true, would render him less qualified to carry on his business.

The law is especially tender with the reputations which men have won in business and will sharply punish anybody who destroys or injures them. To falsely say that a business man is in financial difficulty, or is dishonest, or a fraud, or has been guilty of any other practice which if true would make him a poorer manufacturer, merchant, clerk or artisan than he would otherwise be, is to be guilty of trade libel.

There is a case which holds that it is not a trade libel to say that a merchant does not pay his debts, because even if he didn't he could still be a first-class merchant so far as the public was concerned. But where you run him down generally—say that he has a poor store, doesn't keep a stock, and in fact is a poor, one-horse merchant besides not paying his debts, you paint a picture of slackness, inefficiency, and poor credit, which any court would almost certainly call a trade libel. Always provided, of course, that it was untrue. If true, it is not a civil libel at all.

If the court held it to be a trade libel, it would allow damages even though no actual damages were suffered. The libel law knows two sorts of damages, general and special damages. Special dama actual damages—those whicl necessarily follow from lit which may follow. If the followed, no matter what cumstances, they can be c An example would be wh merchant, speaking of a com said to one of the latter's ers, "he is notorious in the t the shoddy goods he sells," customer, believing it, took h away. In many cases no d except those which have happened, such as the abov loss of a position or of a c can be collected. If no dam be proven, none can be colle

But in trade libels it is no sary to prove special (actua ages; the law allows what "general damages." Gener ages are those which the la necessarily follow from th ing or writing of false wor business men. Wiley Says Federal Food Law Has Been a Partial Failure

Courts Impose Wholly Inadequate Fines for One ing. Again, Much of the Intent of the Act Has Been llified by Executive Rulings Regarding Foreign redients.

I. W. Wiley, former chief Federal Food and Drug and Government chemist ie Federal Food and Drug w a free lance, is not satis- n the operations of the Fed- od Act so far. He con- to the last number of the issued by the Pennsylvania nd Food Department some tions on the subject, a part h are worth reproducing:—

e are many things in the at- of the courts which have very hurtful. Chief among iave been the minimum pun- ts which have been meted Fines of $5 are far more ous than fines of $200, the um allowed for first offense. cond offense, however, much r penalties are provided, them imprisonment, but in as I know, there has been ie case where a man who vio- ne pure food law has gone to Offense after offense by the irm has been passed by with h fines.

courts have sustained the nental principles of the pure icts, as a rule. In the cases iave gone to the Supreme there are only two which, to ind, have been unfortunate. irst was the celebrated can- re case, in which it was held iat part of the law forbidding or misleading statements, applied to drugs, related only tements of their composition ot to their curative value. In- h as so-called nostrums or medicines are always secret, ecision nullified the law com- , and, fortunately, Congress prompt steps to correct this other case was the bleached case, where it was held that wer court erred on not having ed the jury that any poison- rinciple which was added to in the process of bleaching be shown to be harmful to , or possibly harmful. This on evidently rested upon the nception of the idea found in nguage of the act which says there shall be no harmful or erious substance added to which may be harmful to . Having written this state- myself in the text of the act, aving explained its significance e committee, I think I may hat the Supreme Court missed ntended idea. It was an ex- tory phrase to show why these nous or deleterious substances orbidden. It would have been to have not explained, but dea was that they were for- n because they might be injur- to health; not that they must ut that they possibly could be. other decisons which have been rendered by the Supreme Court have all strengthened the law, especially the last one regarding the meaning of the term "Coca Cola."

The principal cause of my dissatisfaction with the law is the fact that by executive act manufacturers have been permitted unrestrictedly to add materials to food products under cover of executive rulings, which, to say the best of them, are open to grave suspicion.

During a time I had constantly under observation twelve young men, all in the prime of life, and varying in age from twenty to thirty years. To these young men were fed, respectively, borax and boric acid, salicylic acid and salicylates, sulphurous acid and sulphites, benzoic acid and benzoates, formaldehyde, sulphate of copper and nitrate of potash. The results of my investigation were all positive against the use of any of these above-named bodies in human foods. There was no very general protest raised over the question of salicylic acid and formaldehyde. My conclusions in regard to these two substances were never seriously contested, and the courts, in the case of boric acid and borate, uniformly supported my contentions.

With the question of benzoic acid and benzoates, sulphurous acid and sulphites and sulphate of copper, a different line of procedure was followed. The users of these bodies were discouraged from going to the courts. They, therefore, sought a method of escape, and appealed to the President of the United States, Mr. Roosevelt, and he with prompt chivalry came to the rescue. He ordered all the conclusions which I had reached on these questions suspended and referred to a new body, to be named by the Secretary of Agriculture, and that pending the decisions of this new body, unrestricted use of these injurious substances be permitted.

This may look like "Americanism" to the adulterator, but to a plain American citizen it is worse than any case of hyphenation that has ever come to my observation, and came near being the death blow to the cause. Workers were disheartened, the whole propaganda shattered and unrestricted adulteration was again in the saddle.

Since that time the execution of the pure food law has been only a mockery, as it never could be enforced in its entirety. The results of the investigation of the Remsen board overthrew my contentions in regard to benzoic acid and benzoates, half-way sustained them in regard to saccharin, and fully confirmed them in regard to sulphate of copper.

Meanwhile, since 1907, the free and unrestricted use of benzoic acid and benzoates and sulphurous acid and sulphites has been permitted to American manufacturers and none but State authorities have dared to say nay. In the case of benzoate, Indiana had a great fight on its hands, but won against all opposition, including that of the Federal Government, in the District Court before Judge Anderson, and his decision against the use of benzoic acid and benzoates was upheld in a sweeping supporting opinion by the Circuit Court. I believe this matter is still before the Supreme Court.

The pure food and drugs law therefore has fallen short of what it meant to accomplish and what it would have accomplished had it not been interfered with illegally by the highest executive authority of the country.

What the people of this country should do is to rise in the majesty of their offended rights and demand that all these handicaps to the pure food law be swept aside. We need not go to Congress to do this; we need only to go to the Department of Agriculture and to the White House. Two successive administrations of four years each have tolerated these wrongs, until now they seem to be fixed principles of justice.

This paper has frequently made the same comment on the inadequacy of some of the fines imposed by Federal courts in food law cases that Dr. Wiley makes.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

Is the Ten-cent Can Passing?

It seems to be the general opinion among jobbers and brokers that the day of the 10-cent can of fruit, vegetable and fish to the consumer is passing with the closing of the season of 1916. A well-known authority in the East states:

> With the increased cost of all materials entering into the production of canned foods, there is no possibility of a profit to any distributor on a 10-cent a can basis to the consumer. This year's pack of canned foods, figured on the collective products, amounts to approximately 60 per cent. of normal. There is warrant for the late advances in prices, and the fact that jobbers have sold freely to the retail trade ever since they began booking orders for future delivery, means that we have not yet seen the top of the market."

All grades of canned salmon are out of the 10-cent class and on some descriptions going out of the 15-cent class. There is demand to care for the entire production. Tomatoes in both No. 2 and No. 3 cans, at the late advance, are in the 15-cent class, and so are corn, string beans, succotash, lima beans and all canned fruits.

This advertising ought to have gotten a lot of business. Naturally the price was the main factor. You don't have to pay so much attention to the advertising itself when you offer something at a cut price. Still, this is good, high grade, dignified advertising and should have pulled even if the price were less atttractive.

I think with the Marsh & Herman advertisement as a test, I can teach a useful little lesson not only to Marsh & Herman, but to the fraternity at large, on conciseness in writing advertising. Useless words and expressions are just as bad for advertising—just as much an adulteration—as glucose in raspberry jam. They clutter up the thought, and waste a lot of space. Let me take the introduction to this circular and see if I can sharpen it up:—

> Here! An opportunity for each and every one of you to get a good supply of BRAN, RED MIDDLING and this wonderful good CERESOTA BREAD FLOUR that is matchless in quality and "out of warehouses prices" that cannot at this time be duplicated in car lots. It should therefore be useless for us to urge you to buy.

> Relative to Distillers Grain and Sugar Feed would say that these goods at the below "out of car prices" are great bargains, as they are the very best wholesome feed on the market and if once fed to your cows, the increased quantity of milk will at once insure it to be a paying proposition.

I should cut this down in the following manner:—

> Here! A chance for everybody to get a good supply of Bran, Red Middling and that matchless Ceresota flour, at prices that we can't get to-day in carload lots. No need to argue much about this bargain.
> While we're about it, we'll offer some Distillers' Grain and Sugar Feed, also at less than to-day's carload prices. These are the best feeds on the market—don't let this chance go by under any circumstances if you keep cows. Just feed them to your cows and see the increase in milk.

There are 114 words in the original two paragraphs; there are ninety in mine, and I leave it to the readers hereof whether I haven't said everything that Marsh & Herman said.

Take the paragraph under Ceresota Flour beginning "Be Quick":

> Be quick, here are 4 tons of this well known extra good quality CERESOTA FLOUR and at the above low money we could not purchase the same to-day in car lots, we therefore must urge upon you to take quick action as we believe the above stock to move out in three or four days.

I suggest this as a condensation:—

> Better be quick on this. W four tons of this famous flo at this price (less than we c for to-day in carload lo shouldn't last over four days.

Get right at the point an in the fewest possible wo gets under the skin a go quicker.

MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD

ESTABLISHED 1885

VOL. LXII. PHILADELPHIA, November 6, 1916. No. 19

NOV 6 1916

Consumers are being educated today, by a variety of conditions, to pay good prices for everything they buy. The retail merchant who doesn't take advantage of that had better drop out—never again will he have such a chance.

American Fair Trade League Prosecutes Pennsylvania Retailer for False Advertising. Some Editorial Comment.

Government Threatening to Prosecute Wholesale Grocer for Suggesting That Retailers Advance Prices.

Serious Situation Presents Itself in Glucose and the Several Important Glucose Products, Syrup, Candy, Starch, etc.

THE Holiday Season is here. Many merchants have arranged the different departments and others are contemplating changes.

The Exchange department, one of the many co-operative features of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," is free to subscribers; see page 30 for particulars.

Mr. Grocer:—Why not be a milkman, too? You can be the biggest milkman in your neighborhood if you tell your customers to add two cans of cold water to one tall can of HIRES GOLD MILK, and then use on the table for drinking and in the kitchen for cooking.

Have you a wheat cereal leader? Does it sell steadily, does it pay you a good profit, does it repeat and repeat and repeat?

If so, you must be selling Wheatena. No other wheat cereal does these things like Wheatena does.

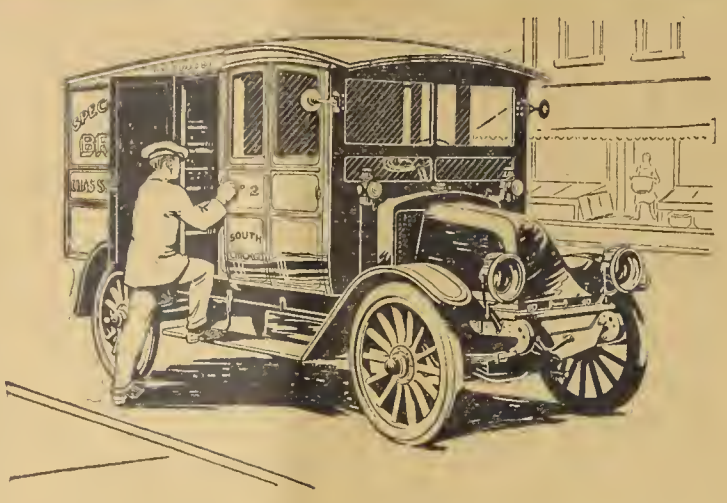
The Specialty Stamp Cured the Big Sore of the Specialty Business



We are advertising the specialty stamp, meaning both of the above, because we have a good thing and we know we have..

We have something that everybody interested in the quick, honest, business-like distribution of specialties should tie to. Retailers especially, because retailers have been great sufferers from the old way of handling specialties. They have suffered much more than jobbers because jobbers, in most cases, merely threw out the specialties that came to them. It was the manufacturer, who had paid good money to get the order, and the retailer, who had signed it and was waiting for it, who suffered.

The specialty stamp has changed all that absolutely. A stamped specialty order now goes through as quick as any other, and as satisfactorily.

The National Dairy Council, whose headquarters are in Chicago, is continuing in its praiseworthy effort to make people eat more butter, milk, cheese and ice cream. The second of its full page advertisements appeared in the "Saturday Evening Post" last week at a cost of about $5,000. The advertisement has been photographed and appears in connection with this article.

NATIONAL DAIRY COUNCIL CHICAGO, ILL.

The writer has discussed this campaign with quite a number of men of the trade, and while some are interested, they all seem utterly unable to understand how it can be expected to yield the slightest result. None of the grocers spoken to about it have had any reason whatever to believe that any of their customers have been impressed by it, yet the National Dairy Council proposes to spend something like $150,000 in educating consumers to eat more butter, cheese, ice cream and milk. No attention is being paid to the dealers who must fill the increased orders if they come. Apparently the National Dairy Council does not believe the retailer's co-operation necessary or desirable.

Some deeper students of merchandising problem have expressed the opinion that the best way to increase the consumption of anything is to work on consumers to make them want to buy more and at the same time work on dealers to make them want to sell more. The National Dairy Council evidently thinks it can get away with its problem without the dealer.

Milk, butter, cheese and ice cream are sold in every nook and cranny of the United States. How can it ever be known whether this advertising is having any effect? With a million brands, and a million dealers? The idea seems so completely vague, and indefinite, and boundless. It seems too fantastic for any use. Who is going to use more butter on account of advertising? They may use more Royal butter, as the result of advertising of Royal butter, but are they going to spread butter twice as thick on bread or potatoes because the National Dairy Council advertises that they ought to?

The same thing applies to ch ice cream and milk. They peculiarly products that peopl what they want of, and then Like sugar. If a consumer ca his coffee sweet enough to suit with three spoonfuls, can amount of advertising persuad to use four?

The "Modern Merchant Grocery World" ventures the diction that after the Nat Dairy Council has spent its $15 it will admit that its advertisin not caused the slightest rippl the sea of trade.

Chicago Wholesaler Issues Circular to Retail Trade gesting an Advance to the Present Market of G Bought Early. United States Attorney Starts Inves tion and Says Circular Explains High Cost of Livin

There is talk of prosecuting certain Chicago wholesale grocers because they sent out to retailers a circular suggesting that they advance prices on goods bought some time ago under to-day's market. The circular is in part as follows:—

> It is to be hoped that retailers everywhere are, in justice to themselves, marking up figures on the goods they secured by contracting when prices were low.
> Will the grocer who has long lamented the scantiness of his profits let up now long enough to bring in the heaping basket left on his doorstep?
> There are large operators predicting that advances have only begun; they say that a further rise of 100 per cent. on various food items is strictly among the possibilities.
> Our friends who put the bumper earnings of 1916 securely away can rest serene and undisturbed, while the fellow who shoveled out corn at three for a quarter will retire once more to shovel it on the farm this time as a renter.
> Our representatives should make themselves heard at once on this readjusting of retail prices.

In some way the United States District Attorney for the Chicago district got hold of one of the circulars and at once rushed into the papers with this overwhelming evidence of violation of law. In an interview he said: "The best explanation of the high cost of living is contained in that circular shows that the retailer is bein couraged virtually to hold u public."

The "Modern Merchant and cery World" predicts that no will come of this. Without a jobber has a right to advis tailers to do anything he likes. retailers don't have to accept advice, but if they did, and vanced prices of goods by they were the owners, they be wholly within their legal ri

National Coffee Roasters' Association Issues New Government Coffee Ruling. Shoes Not Yet Through Advancing. Department Stores Again Take Up High Delivery Cost. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, November 3, 1916.

The National Coffee Roasters' Association of this city has given out during the week a ruling made by the Department of Agriculture on mixtures of coffee chaff and coffee screenings with coffee, and the labeling of coffee produced in the Dutch East Indies. The text of the ruling is as follows:—

181. MIXTURES OF COFFEE CHAFF AND COFFEE SCREENINGS WITH COFFEE.

Coffee is the seed of coffea arabica or coffea liberica, freed from all but a small portion of the spermoderm. Coffee chaff and coffee screenings are not coffee, and mixtures of these with coffee are adulterated and misbranded under the provisions of the Food and Drugs Act, if labeled, sold, or offered for sale as coffee.

182. LABELING OF COFFEES PRODUCED IN THE DUTCH EAST INDIES.

In view of the shortage of Java coffee the bureau has been requested to advise whether mixtures consisting of Java and Sumatra may be labeled as Java coffee. As stated in Food Inspection Decision 82, coffee grown in Sumatra may be labeled either as "Sumatra" or as "Dutch East Indian" coffee. The bureau regards as misbranded mixtures of Mocha and Sumatra coffee if labeled as "Mocha and Java" coffee.

The general merchants who handle shoes will be interested in an announcement made by a number of large local shoe dealers during the week that further advances in practically all varieties of shoes may be expected. Owing to the scarcity of leather and the heavily increased demand, shoes have already advanced from $1.50 to $3 per pair since the war began. As a matter of fact, from 50 to 75 per cent. of this has occurred since last July. Some manufacturers and jobbers will hold prices where they are until the coming spring, but nobody seems confident that he can hold them longer than that. On everything some firms are advancing right along. One large firm advanced medium grade shoes 25 cents a pair during the week. The coming few months will undoubtedly witness the coming forward of a number of substitutes for sole leather. A number of these are already being exploited. There has yet, however, been no substitute for leather from which the upper part of shoes are made. One factor in the heavy advance of women's shoes is the scarcity of dye.

The wholesale coffee trade of this city will send a very large delegation to the National Coffee Roasters' convention in Atlantic City from November 14th to 17th. Coffee dealers here were very much shocked to hear of the accident which happened to Secretary George W. Toms, who fell between two cars of the Pennsylvania Railroad at Haverford, Pa., recently and lost the greater part of his left foot.

The special feature of the coffee convention which the local trade are watching for most eagerly is the report of a committee on "How the retailer can improve his coffee business."

Some of the department stores are beginning to agitate the high cost of delivery and to discuss the question whether or not some way could be devised for reducing it. The New York department stores are looser in their delivery methods than the department stores of any other city in the United States. They will deliver anything from a paper of pins to a piano in almost every section of the city. There is talk of a combination among them to cut out delivery abuses. It is acknowledged by all that no one store could accomplish this alone.

Envy the Retailers of Virginia.

I congratulate the retail merchants of Virginia with all my heart and soul. On Wednesday last there was given to them the greatest boon that can be given to business men anywhere—the going into effect of a statewide prohibition law. During the few days next before November 1st, hundreds of liquor dealers folded their tents like the Arabs and silently stole away, to other States from which liquor has not yet been excluded.

There is nothing experimental about the future of the retail business in Virginia. Similar laws have become operative in other States and the result has always been the same. I can tell the retailers of Virginia precisely what is going to happen to them. From now on they will sell more goods, they will sell better goods, they will sell them to more people, they will find their collections better. Families that they have refused to sell to because they had no credit will become good and valued customers. When liquor goes out, everything decent looks up.

The Newspapers and a False Advertising Case.

What can a newspaper think of itself when it suppresses a matter of public interest, the publication of which is needed for public protection, merely because the chief actor in it is an advertiser?

In another column appears the facts of a prosecution which the American Fair Trade League brought against I. E. Oppenheim, head of the Scranton Dry Goods Co., for advertising as "all wool" a cloth that was 49 per cent. cotton. On the face of it, it of course looks like rank fraud.

Oppenheim was held in $300 bail for court. He made no defense at the magistrate's hearing, though he could have done so under a recent Pennsylvania law.

The significant phase of the incident is contained in the last two lines in the article published elsewhere in this issue—the fact that not a single Scranton paper mentioned the incident at all. Why? Possibly because the Scranton Dry Goods Co. is an advertiser or might become an advertiser. Was that a decent reason for suppressing the matter? Look at the case for one moment. If the Scranton Dry Goods Co. is selling cloth 49 per cent. cotton and calling it all wool—I say "if" because the concern may be able to show that it is not guilty, though it didn't attempt to show it at the hearing—then it is perpetrating a fraud upon the public and ought to be shown up. Can there be any doubt about that? And how sincere is the newspaper in its professed role of public servant and protector, when it deprives its readers of the information with which they might protect themselves? Perhaps the newspaper will say, "Well, we will give Oppenheim the benefit of the doubt and publish nothing until he has had his trial." But, I ask, will you then publish the fact of his conviction if he is convicted? And will you further exclude his advertising if he is convicted, on the ground that he is unfit to use your columns?

A Co-operative Buying Argument That Only Has One Fault.

Mr. Harry E. Sloan, secretary of the Missouri-Kansas Wholesale Grocers' Association, has issued a statement in which he shows conclusively and convincingly that co-operative buying organizations among retailers cannot succeed. Here is some of his statement:—

> Wherever a "co-operative buying exchange" or what-you-may-call-it is formed it always has the central agitator or promoter. Somebody must be at the head and his salary goes on and expense creeps up. Eventually, if any one will follow it as many have, it eats up all the profit of the "middleman," calls for more, and gives unsatisfactory service. In the meantime the retail dealer who is a party to it, finds that he is still buying goods of the wholesale grocer and that his "co-operative exchange" is only rendering service on staples in which there no profit anyway. Then con in the fact of declining ma kets. We don't always ha advances. What goes up mu come down. The tendency buy in "co-operative e changes" is limited to t maximum quantity. Who pa on a declining market?
> The retail dealer who joi a "buying exchange" delega his purchases to the "ma squeeze" who may or may n be a wizard in business. He tempted to buy beyond h needs and beyond his ability pay in order to "make up car."

The only trouble with this a ment is that it isn't true. E retailers' co-operative buying change that I know of has ceeded if it was run right. I at those which have for years operated by the Philadelphia Frankford Retail Grocers' Ass tions. What about them? T are not experiments; they are soned successes. They turn enormous volume of merchan they save their members mo none of the disasters which Sloan speaks of have ever happ to them. And these cases are alone; there are plenty of oth How does Mr. Sloan square t existence with the statements n in his argument?

P. F. McLAUGHLIN.

This introduces Mr. P. F. McLaughlin to anybody to whom these presents may come. He has acquired a one-half interest in the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," and will henceforth be associated with all of its activities. Mr. McLaughlin has been connected with the trade paper field for eleven years, and has made a deep impress upon it. He was born in Pennsylvania and his first business experience was in a retail grocery store conducted by his family. He will be a decided acquisition to this paper and the readers hereof may expect to see the impress of his personality at a very early date.

Witness the state- ment of the good Mrs. Short, at this meeting; she blamed the high prices on something or somebody she vaguely called "combines." No real data, no facts—nothing but re- sentment at the high prices and the desire to unload on somebody.

The worst offenders are the newspapers. They know that their subscribers want to be sympathized with about high prices, and to be told that "retailers" or "trusts" or somebody else, are grinding the faces of the poor. And they do the sympathizing and they do the tell- ing, coloring both of course as their political and business interests dic- tate. The only people that have ever really investigated these con- ditions are Government officials, who have invariably reported that no combine existed and no illegiti- mate profit was being charged by retailers.

he condition of the supply in y of the products which have advanced the most makes the high prices all the more amazing. Take beans, which I have already dis- cussed. With beans at their top- most price for years, news comes from Michigan that the acreage is greater than last year, and they ex- pect a larger yield per acre. The total crop will be almost twice last year's, yet present prices would be excessive even if the crop promised to be half as large. Another case is tomatoes. The pack is good— much larger than last year, yet prices are almost twice what they usually are. What's the answer?

Speaking of canned goods, buyers report that a good many packers have been pleased to violate their contracts this year, tempted by the great advance over the price at which they sold for future delivery. One buyer contracted for 1,000 cases of future Maryland corn at around 62½ cents, which is about the usual price for that grade. Be- fore the time came to deliver, the price had almost doubled and the packer calmly told his buyer that he could not deliver any. There was no contract in this case con- taining a lot of provisions under which the packer could squeeze out.

There was merely a confirmation. The packer of course sold his 1,000 cases to somebody else at about $1,000 profit over the original price. I have heard of many other instances. Manifestly the temptation was great, but no honest packer would have yielded to it. Probably if the packer I refer to above were sued for breach of contract, he would turn over a new leaf.

I know a salesman who has a great reputation for selling cakes and crackers. He tells me that when a dealer's cake and cracker stock is scattered all over the store, he finds it a good plan to talk cracker departments and show him pictures of some. By this means he cannot help realizing that where the products are in a centralized location they tend to increase their own sales automatically and moreover to improve the appearance of his store. THE JOBBER.

A Charge That Flour Manufacturers Are Sacrificing Nutriment to Whiteness.

Complaints that the public sacrifices nutriment in bread to appearances and that flour manufacturers mill the food value out of flour in order to produce whiteness were forwarded to the Department of Agriculture during the week by Miss Florence King, president of the Woman's Association of Commerce of Chicago, who is seeking to have flour included in the application of the new grain inspection act. B. C. Roloff, director of the United Charities in Chicago, declared experiments had shown that pigeons, chickens and white mice could not live more than three weeks on the high priced white flour that is made into bread to-day. "If the expensive milling operations were cut out and the machinery junked," he said, "the cost of flour would be decreased at once and its nutrition value greatly increased."

The list here presented includes practically every leading magazine and periodical, and products that are not advertised in at least some of them are hardly advertised in this way at all, although they may be in newspapers or in direct ways, such as sampling, demonstrating, etc.]

ll Business Prospects in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware

: "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" Addresses a Letter to a Representative Grocer or General Storekeeper in Every County of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, Asking the Condition of Business, Whether the People are Employed and Have Money, Whether Chain Store Competition Affects Them, and Condition of Collections. Some More of the Answers Received.

ı an effort to learn what the imiate future holds for retail gro- and general storekeepers durthe coming fall and winter, the odern Merchant and Grocery rld" has addressed a letter to a esentative retailer in every ıty in Pennsylvania, New Jerand Delaware. The letter asked dealers addressed to answer the owing questions:—

1. Is there plenty of money in your rritory?
2. Are the people employed?
3. Are your collections good?
4. Are you suffering from chain ore competition?
5. On the whole, do you expect ur business to be as good, or tter, or not as good, as last Fall's siness?

Answers to these questions are inning to come in and will be lished as fast as received.

CENTRE COUNTY, PA.

1.—Have dealings with orking class.
2.—Yes.
3.—Yes.
4.—No.
5.—Expect it to be as good.

CUMBERLAND COUNTY, MD.

1.—Yes.
2.—Yes.
3.—Yes.
4.—No.

The prices of all goods are o exceptionally high and still going up. It is very hard to predict how business will be affected. Our trade is largely with the farmers and their crops and the prices are good.

E. D. BEAR,
Carlisle, Pa.

WYOMING COUNTY, PA.

Is there plenty of money in ny territory? It seems to be rather more plentiful than usual on account of the high prices of farm products.

Are the people employed? Yes, I think every one is busy that wants to work.

Are your collections good? Yes, about as usual this time of year; ought to be better when the farmers get their products marketed.

Are you suffering from chain store competition? Yes and No. We have a chain store directly across the street (the Globe Green Front Store) and they certainly sell some kinds of goods cheaper than we do, such as staple advertised goods, and are apparently making good, but in spite of this fact and also that we have more competition along other lines, our business during 1916 so far has shown an increase every month, which has really surprised us very much.

On the whole, we expect the business here to be better than last fall, unless we get some very unseasonable weather, which always makes considerable difference in volume of sales with us.

CORRESPONDENCE.

This Looks Like a Good Thing.

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 2, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I have a bookkeeping system, very simple to my estimation, enabling me to tell about three hours after close of business on Saturday to tell exactly my loss and gain.

I always know the exact amount of my stock. There is never no excuse of overstocking. I can buy heavy on things that sell fast, and less on those that sell slow.

In buying futures I can buy just enough to last till new stock by my system.

I have had about twenty years' experience in this line and have tried different systems, but now I have a simple system that a school child can use.

Yours,
A. KLAPPROTH,

Good Codfish Is Scarce This Year

¶ Not only scarce, but high. You know that from watching the markets.

¶ Be sure that you don't sell your trade a fish which is either a poor codfish or no cod at all.

¶ Gorton's Codfish is this year exactly what it has always been—the finest codfish packed. It will sell for a little more money than it has in previous years, but it is worth every cent of it. And compared with other food products, it's still a very cheap food.

¶ Feature Gorton's Codfish, the best thing of its class.

Situation Grows Critical in Glucose a Glucose Products

Syrup, Starch, Candy, Jellies, Are All Affected. Gluc Temporarily Out of Market. All Glucose Products Above Normal and Some Withdrawn.

In the history of glucose there has never been such a condition as now exists. Glucose enters into syrups, starch, cheap candies and cheap jellies and jams, and the sale of these products is enormous.

At the moment it is impossible to buy glucose from any manufacturer for prompt shipment. There is none for sale. The price is therefore more or less nominal—$3.50 per 100 pounds in large lots, $3.75 to $4 in small. The price should be around $2.50.

The reason for the advance is the scarcity of old crop corn and the fact that new crop will not be available for a month or six weeks. The companies are not willing to buy any more old corn than they need as the price is enormous—$1.12 per bushel for cash corn, the highest price since 1867.

All products into which glucose enters are advancing and are already unprecedentedly high. Low priced candy, which is largely composed of glucose, is up ½ to 1 cent per pound and will go higher. A large local manufacturer said during the week that if he could buy several cars of glucose wit the next three weeks, he would h to close down his factory.

Compound syrup is also very and most manufacturers of tin syrup have withdrawn from market. They will not sell and will not quote. A fair statemen the advance in tinned syrup is plied by the figures of one manu turer, who usually sells 2-po tins at $1.70 per dozen, but would now have to get $2.25. compound syrup is probably 10 cent. up.

Starch, which is not a glu product, but a corn product, is ½ cent per pound.

Compound jellies and jams almost all advanced, or all will cause they cannot be made at p ent prices. And as a matter of if the situation in glucose sh continue, they would soon ceas exist.

One reason for the heavy adv in soaps, which still continues the scarcity and high prices of oil.

Bread Has Advanced Pretty Much Everywhere.

A Government inquiry in 45 of the leading food centres of the country, covering the period from May 15th to September 15th, shows that of 210 brands of bread that retailed for 5 cents and weighed 15 ounces or over on May 15th, only 14 remained at the same price and weight on September 15th. Bakers gave as reasons for changes in price and weight the increased cost of material and ingredients, especially flour. The changes were most numerous in the last two months which the figures cover.

Aunt Jemima's List Price Has Been Advanced But It Still Remains the Cheapest Food on the Market.

In times like these when the average family must practice economies because of the high cost of living, housewives are occasionally misled.

For instance a woman buys one of the cheaper grades of pancake flour and adds to it the sweet which is necessary to make re good pancakes.

She could have saved money she bought Aunt Jemima's Pan Flour, which already contains s milk—in powdered form of co She could have saved the price bottle of milk. And a bottle milk at this writing costs abo cents.

Which is cheaper—a packag pancake flour costing 10 cents, which must be added 9 cents w of milk to make them good, o package of Aunt Jemima's cos a cent or two more, but which tains the necessary milk?

It doesn't require much to cip that out.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market during the week has shown no change. Demand is active from day to day and good business reported everywhere. Full prices are being gotten by everybody. There is no disposition to shade on anybody's part.

Coffee.

The coffee market is weaker for the week, speaking particularly of Rio and Santos, which ranges from ¼ to ⅜ cent below a week ago. The reason appears to be the large supply of coffee and the fact that the New York cotton interests which have been supporting the market have temporarily withdrawn from it. Demand is poor. Mild coffee shows no change for the week, but may be forced below their present very low basis if Brazils go lower. Java and Mocha unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

The sugar market is still in a nervous and unsettled condition. Raws have been sold up to 6.67, but during the week certain holders have sold down to around 6.40. The situation is still very strong and will continue strong until beet granulated begins to come into the market and raw sugar is available from other sections. Relief will probably not come for three or four weeks at least. Refined sugar is unchanged from last week. Consumptive demand is poor.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is temporarily out of the market. No manufacturer will accept orders for prompt shipment. The most important tinned syrup people are also out of the market, having no syrup which they are willing to sell at the moment. Such quotations on tinned syrup as are available are about 30 per cent. above normal. Sugar syrup is very dull and unchanged in price, but rules on a high basis. Molasses unchanged and quiet.

Canned Goods.

Sales of Maryland No. 3 tomatoes have actually been made during the week at $1.40 a dozen. The market is exceedingly dangerous at this figure and nobody is warranted in buying more than they can immediately use. It is certain that the 1916 pack of tomatoes is pretty well out of packers' hands but certainly a very large percentage of it must remain unsold in jobbers' or retailers' hands. Demand is fair considering the situation. Corn is unchanged from last week, but very scarce and very high, and with no prospect of any decline. Peas are unchanged for the week, the entire line being firm on a comparatively high basis. Apples are working up but show no radical advance for the week. California canned goods are scarce on the coast and firm everywhere. Small Eastern staple canned goods are very scarce and very high, particularly spinach, which has advanced another nickel during the week, making the large way quotation $1.30.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are unchanged from last week, being perhaps just a shade easier. Demand is quiet. Peaches and apricots are neglected, with prices about unchanged. Raisins are still out of the market, so far as offerings are concerned, the crop damage recently reported being responsible. Prices continue on the last reported basis. Currants remain extremely high, being about twice the normal price as previously reported, with no change for the week. There are no imported figs, and will be none during the coming season. Dates remain unchanged.

Beans and Peas.

The ever elastic bean market has taken another jump during the week and the present quotation on pea beans is $7.50 a bushel. This is three times the price that was ruling only a comparatively short time ago. Marrows are ruling from $7.50 to $7.75. The scarcity and large demand are given as the reasons. California limas rule at about 7½, which is an advance of about ½ cent for the week. Green peas have also advanced to $4.75 per bushel in a large way. Scotch maintain their parity of about 15 cents higher than green. Small white beans from Manchuria, which are being sold as Japanese beans, are cutting some figure in the market, also green dried beans from Chili.

Butter.

The butter market is very firm at an advance of 1 cent per pound. This is due to the heavy consumptive demand, large exports and lighter receipts. The average quality is showing up well for the season and the prospects are for even higher prices during the present month. It looks now as if butter might not drop until after the first of the year.

Eggs.

The egg market is very firm at an advance of 1 cent per dozen on strictly fresh stock. Storage eggs are also firm and unchanged, with a good consumptive demand. The receipts of fancy fresh eggs are light and promise to continue light for some time. Storage eggs are gradually tending up, although they are already about 7 cents per dozen above normal.

Cheese.

The cheese market is very firm at ¼ to ½ cent advance, due mostly to the large export business and advices from the country points quoting an advance of ½ to 1 cent. The make has also dropped off. The quality is generally good for the season. Skims are in light supply and good demand.

Fish.

There has been no change in shore mackerel during the week. We are getting less fine shore n erel than we have been, as the has been very well worked ove no recession has been made high prices on account of the d in quality, the market has in advanced. Irish mackerel sho change, as do Norways. Th mand for mackerel is good co ering the prices. Cod, hake haddock show no change, the line being very high and scarce, ticularly cod. Salmon is uncha for the week, demand being good considering the high p Everything is very firm. Don sardines have advanced to $3.5 quarter oils; supply light. De quiet. Imported sardines are changed and still on a very basis. Some Norwegian su sardines are coming over but enough to easily supply the de

Provisions.

The provision market is firm unchanged, with a good cons tive demand. Prices are not to go any higher during Nove as the hog killing season has opened. In fact it is possible the prices may go lower. La very firm at ½ to ¾ cent adv There is no surplus and stock very light. In spite of the high prices (17¾ to 18 cents) home consumption is very h Compound lard is very firm shows an advance of ¼ cent. demand is good and the supply light. All cottonseed oil pro are high. Barreled pork is firm unchanged with a fair consum demand and very light rec

NOTES OF THE DRY GOODS MARKET.

The enormous advances in cotton d cotton goods are exciting the ention of the trade everywhere. ıring the last three months raw ton has advanced fully 40 per ıt., while many cotton goods have vanced from 20 to 30 per cent. eeting, for example, has ad-nced from 5¾ to 7½ cents, and s is typical of advances along the tire line of cotton goods. Wool ods are also moving up and so e silks.

All dry goods jobbers report a ry heavy business for this period their season. The demand for ess goods is abnormally good, rticularly for serges and fancy atings.

New prices on woolen hosiery for xt fall's delivery will probably be ened in ten days or two weeks the primary markets. Owing to e difficulty in obtaining the needed ool and also to labor troubles, very gh prices are expected.

Wholesale dry goods dealers re-rt a shortage of children's and ys' union suits in all grades. Out-g flannels have advanced about 35 r cent. over opening prices and tton blankets a further 10 per nt.

Wool sweaters are on the upward end on account of the difficulty getting yarn. One of the most ominent lines of wool sweaters ıs advanced sharply during the eek. Cotton sweaters are also gher.

Marshall Field & Co., in their eekly review of the dry goods ade, say:—

Wholesale dry goods distribution for the current week shows large gains over the corresponding period of 1915.

Road orders for immediate and future shipment have been in heavier volume than for the same week of past years.

Merchants have visited the market in much larger numbers.

Collections for the week are in excess of the same period last year.

The market on domestic cotton goods is firm and advancing.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Wheat and Flour.

We have had some wild wheat markets this week and prices have scored a very considerable advance. We are rapidly approaching a very acute situation in that the price of wheat must be forced to an altitude that will compel rigid economy in its use.

The wheat situation is a very distressing one from a humanitarian point of view. The high cost of wheat will mean that hundreds of thousands of people will go hungry.

The world is just beginning to awaken to the fact that disaster has overtaken the food supply. We have discussed the wheat situation from every angle in all of our letters, and the condition we are facing to-day is one that we have foreseen for many months.

It seems to have been the policy of European wheat statisticians to minimize the requirements of the importing nations and magnify the quantities to be obtained from the exporting countries.

It has been contended that Europe was more or less independent of North America, but every week brings forth additional evidence of greater needs and smaller supplies. For instance this week's shipments from Australia are only 472,000 bushels as against over 2 million last week. India and Argentina have shipped this week 1,800,000 bushels as against 3,500,000 bushels last week.

The question is, where is Europe to get wheat?

Our visible supply in the United States is 60 million bushels as against 20 million last year. The Canadian visible is 16,814,000 bushels as against 18,067,000 bushels a year ago. We must be prepared to see these stocks dwindle away very rapidly and then witness a scramble amongst millers and exporters for the wheat that remains in our farmers' hands.

While wheat is to-day selling at a very high price it still has a long way to go before it will surpass the highest point reached, namely, $3.25 in New York in 1867. Here are the figures for wheat, corn and oats during the Civil War, and for three years after its close:—

HIGH PRICES IN NEW YORK.

Year.	Wheat.	Corn.	Oats.
1861	$1.36½	.71	.38
1862	1.43	.65	.58
1863	1.75	.93	.87
1864	2.75½	1.60	1.00½
1865	2.56	1.88	1.09½
1866	2.80	.96	.72
1867	3.25	1.35	.75
1868	2.75	1.44	.87

We give these figures because we think they are of particular interest in showing that the conclusion of the Civil War did not bring about lower prices. Wheat is the very life blood of nations—it is the staff of Expert Testimony!

Millions of kiddies in this great land might write the same thing to-night—and no better evidence of the real worth and popularity of Jell-O could be asked. For back of these kiddies who "just love" Jell-O are millions of mothers who are constantly seeking what is best for their children, and back of these mothers stand the most famous cooks and diet scientists in the nation.

They Know Jell-O is Pure and Good

And every woman who has to keep her home running right knows what a blessing it is to have at hand a PERFECT DESSERT—not only for the children—but for every sort of company and occasion, from the simplest to the most formal.

Jell-O is put up in seven pure flavors: Raspberry, Strawberry, Lemon, Chocolate, Orange, Peach and Cherry.

The flavors are pure fruit flavors, and the full strength of the flavors is preserved by the air-tight waxed paper "Safety Bags" enclosing Jell-O inside the cartons.

In all the world is no dime's worth like a package of Jell-O.

Look at These Shelves

Here is a store fitted with Baines' Brackets. Our word for it, there are at least 25 per cent. more goods on the shelves here than there can possibly be on the shelves of any similar store using the old style shelves. No crowding either.

The point about Baines' Brackets is that they hold up the shelves without uprights. That gives you the use of the whole unobstructed shelf length, and not only greatly improves the appearance of your stock, but gives you a place for at least one-fourth more goods.

A Change in Price on Aunt Jemima's Pancake and Buckwheat Flour

We have issued a new price list, dated Oc-ber 20th, which increases the price of Aunt mima's Pancake and Buckwheat Flours.

The reason for this advance lies in the abnor-al condition of the wheat and corn market, ıich gives us the choice of making this change doing business at a heavy loss.

This statement is warranted by the comparative st of wheat and corn.

No. 2 White Corn	.59	1.00

till the Cheapest Food on the Market

While you will find it necessary to ask more than before for Aunt Jemima's, remember that this popular food is ready mixed with all that is required, including the sweet milk, in powdered form, which every housewife knows is necessary to make good pancakes. This feature saves the housewife the cost of a bottle of milk with every package, and a bottle of milk costs at this writing an average of 9 cents.

Aunt Jemima Is Nationally Advertised

Full pages in the Saturday Evening Post, Ladies' Home Journal, Woman's Home Companion, Good Housekeeping, and other standard publications, will constantly acquaint the housewife with the economy of these goods, because of the sweet milk feature and because of the quality of the other ingredients that go into it.

Aunt Jemima Stands for Quality

This advertising will make the goods sell quickly—make a quick turn-over for you—and that means profit.

Housewives will readily pay more for Aunt Jemima's if they understand that they actually save money on account of the milk feature. Pancake Flour without the milk feature is very expensive.

Tell your customers about this. Show them how they can save money by using Aunt Jemima's. Remember, no milk should be added, for sweet milk in powdered form is already mixed with the flour.

AUNT JEMIMA MILLS COMPANY - - St. Joseph, Mo.

This is a Lesson by Me in Advertising.

D'ye know, there's an awful bunch of fellows in the retail business that advertise right along, or do what they think's advertising, that don't any more know what advertising means than a dead man.

I was talking with a customer of mine last week. He's one of 'em, and when I tell you his story I tell you the story of a big bunch of other fellows in the same boat.

Him and I was talking about business in general. His town is a good live country town, about 6,000 people, with two papers in it, one Republican and one Democrat. This customer of mine is a Republican and he does a little bit in politics. Been a candidate for one or two little offices, I believe, though he ain't ever got elected, so they tell me.

I asked him what he did in the way of advertising.

"Oh, I have an ad. in the Republican paper right along," he said.

"That the best paper here?" I said.

"It's all right," he said. "The Democrat sheet has a bigger circulation. You know this county is Democrat. But I wouldn't advertise in that, you can bet your boots."

"Why not?"

"Didn't I tell you it was Democratic?" he said. "I'm a Republican."

"What the hen has that got to do with it?" I asked him.

"What's it got to do with it?" he came back, as if I was a jackass for asking, "think I'm going to advertise in a Democrat paper when I'm a Republican?"

"Well, can you beat that?" I said. "What are you advertising for anyway, old man? To help politics or to help your business? I'd advertise in any old thing that would get business for me. Good Lord! Don't you sell goods to Democrats?"

"What's that go to do with it?" he said.

"It ain't got anything, if you don't see it," I said.

"Well, I wouldn't advertise in the sheet anyway," he said. "When I was running for Township Collector last year it roasted me up hill and down dale. Said I wasn't as good a man as the Democratic candidate, and a lot of things."

"Well, when you come to that," I said, "it might be the truth. But I don't give a darn whether it is or not. If it's a good paper and I could get business by advertising in it, you can bet your neck I'd do it."

"Oh, advertising don't pay anyway," he said. "I advertise in the other paper right along and don't get a thing out of it."

"What rate do you pay?" I asked.

"I don't know, tell the truth, It's a trade arrangement. I've been in it for years."

"What d'ye mean, a trade arrangement?" I asked him.

"Why, he puts the ad. in and takes it out in goods," he said. "He owes me a lot of money, too. I'll have to get after that."

"Who gets up the copy?"

"Oh every once in a while he comes around and I tell him what to put in."

"Well, do you get any business from it?"

"Not a bit."

"And I ain't surprised," I said. "I'd be a heap surprised if you did get any. You pick the poorest sheet in the place to put your ad. in, don't pay any attention to what it costs, or what kind of stuff goes in it, and call it doing advertising. That ain't advertising. Holy gee!

"Don't you know," I said, "that there's a whole bunch of fellows that pull good money out of their advertising? Ain't it ever struck you that that's what advertising's for?"

"What do you know about it?" he said.

I just sat and looked at him like a papa does at his boy that he'd like to lam but dassn't because the boy's bigger than he is.

"I don't know anything," I said. "Not a blamed thing beside a big advertising gun like you. body knows anything abo vertising side of you."

Listen here. I ain't any tising man but I see what tising does and I'd give my two shirts to jump in and just see what I could d that fellow's business. couldn't get people in that that ain't ever been in it I'd eat the shirt without s

What Does It Mean To Grow.—Six feet isn't growing. You've known fellows nearly twice as tall as you are that couldn't figure out the one-half of one per cent. on one hundred dollars to save themselves. Real growing (commercially) is mental growth. You remember some time ago I had a paragraph that read something like this: "What have I done to-day to make this business better?" That's a very searching question. I found it on my desk one morning neatly written by a member of the firm with whom I am now associated. It went right straight home. Night after night I resolved in my mind the things I had "done." Some were small things, of course, but the sum total showed that I was a factor in helping to strengthen the business and I felt proud of it. That's growing. Your mind is at work. A man's hands and legs and tongue may be busy all day long, yet he may have accomplished very little. To grow, gentlemen, you must actually put yourselves boss's place. If you don't so he's going to put another fe your place.

"The Greatest Match Makers in the World"

¶ Pretty good reputation that, isn't it? But it's true and we regard it as a good deal of a standard to live up to. We won it only after thirty-three years of honest, intelligent attention to scientific study, skill in production and honest dealing with the public.

¶ And that wasn't all that brought it. We never would have won it without the friendship and co-operation of the Grocers of the United States—the friend alike of the manufacturer and the consumer.

It takes the right kind of combination to set the world ablaze

No. 388.—The Right of Cancelling Orders Seen in Two Lights.

Here is an every day business problem on cancelling orders which will be of general interest:

Pennsylvania.

We should like to be informed just how far our right to cancel an order goes in the following case. We try to stand by our orders and agreements, and always have done so, but we confess that occasionally we have cancelled orders, when it has been profitable to do so. We suppose that if the manufacturer had refused to accept our cancellation, we would have taken the order, but it was allowed, and everybody seemed to do it, so we have gone along with the rest.

Now in this case we ordered goods for early September shipment. We told the salesman that we would want them by the 10th, as our selling season for these goods is on by then. There was nothing in the order which said by the 10th; it merely said early September shipment. The writer has read the order carefully and there is nothing in it which gives the manufacturer a right to change the shipment.

The goods did not come by September 10th, and when we wrote, they said they would ship as soon as possible. A lot of things tied them up, they said, and we wrote back giving a few more days, and then again demanded shipment, and still nothing happened, and on September 30th, we wrote cancelling the order. It is true that the market was a little lower then, but that was not the reason for cancelling. We cancelled because the goods were so late that we had to buy elsewhere. Finally on October 10th the goods came. We refused to receive them and they went back. Now the manufacturer says we must take them and threatens to sue if we do not. We have told him to sue. Please state whether we are liable and whether he will likely get judgment against us if he sues.

Yours,
A. B. & Co.

I should say that the seller in such a case, having broken his own contract first, could never get judgment from the buyer. That seems as sure as anything can be.

Here, in a nutshell, is the law covering cancellation of orders: A, a retailer, is called on by B, a salesman for a wholesale dealer C. A signs an order for goods, and B forwards it to C. There is nothing in the order to qualify it in any way; it is a flat order for goods, which the salesman, with authority, accepts and forwards.

When that order is accepted, it becomes a completed contract between A and C, and if it wasn't for one thing, which I will discuss presently, A could no more cancel it without C's consent, than C could refuse to ship the goods without A's consent. Nevertheless such orders are cancelled by the hundreds every day, and very rarely indeed does the seller do anything about it. As a matter of business policy, he lets it pass just as his competitors do. In this way the right of cancellation has become a custom of the trade, which is really, in a sense, written into the order. In other words it has become so firmly fixed as a custom or habit, that when a buyer gives an order, it could be argued with much force that he did so subject to the customary right of cancellation before shipment. Indeed, I will go further than that, and say that where A, a jobber, and B, a retailer, have been dealing together for a time, and A has repeatedly allowed B to cancel his orders, he, A, cannot refuse the privilege without giving B notice. A, after allowing repeated cancellations, could not suddenly say some day, when B cancelled an order, "No, this order you must take."

In order to get around this, many manufacturers and jobbers are now putting in their order blanks the words "This order not subject to cancellation." That gets rid of the custom of the trade absolutely. A buyer who signs an order with those words in it cannot cancel on the ground that he has always been allowed to do it. It is then a positive co and he must take the goods.

All the above has to do with cases where the buye tempts to cancel right awa fore the seller has had tin ship. In such a case as the correspondent cites, he cer had the right to cancel at any after September 15th, for September" shipment obv could not extend beyond the dle of the month. The grou cancellation was of course the seller had fallen down contract. And if the buye the right to cancel any time September 15th, he certainl the right to do it September In my opinion the manufa in this correspondent's case a leg to stand on.

Sell Borden's Milks for Cooking Purposes

BORDEN'S EAGLE BRAND CONDENSED MILK and BORDEN'S PEERLESS BRAND EVAPORATED MILK should also be sold by you for cooking purposes. Do not be satisfied to let your customers use BORDEN'S MILKS only at the table; they are better than raw milk for many dishes; for baking cakes, cookies, cinnamon buns, crullers and waffles; they enrich all gravies, soups and sauces. BORDEN'S EAGLE BRAND CONDENSED MILK is the best for babies. It is rapidly and completely digested by the infant stomach, contains all the nourishment of fresh cow's milk and is absolutely pure. It has been famous as an infant food since 1857; more infants have been successfully reared upon it than upon all the other infant foods combined, and the hundreds of thousands of sales of EAGLE BRAND have passed solely through the wholesale and retail trade. You have no article in your entire stock that is more popular or more widely known. You will avoid trouble from dissatisfied customers if you will PUSH THE SALE of BORDEN'S BRANDS.

A great many writers on trade topics agree that the biggest single item of expense in the retail business is delivery, and that in many cases this could be very decidedly cut down. All agree, also, that it is more or less of a touchy subject with the consumer, who is lazy and greedy and likes everything given him and done for him that can be. Here is an advertisement on delivery which appeared in the Dover (N. J.) "Advance" from Lehman & Co., retail grocers of Dover, N. J.:—

DELIVERY SERVICE.

To be your delivery clerk isn't a very enviable job at any time and is particularly undesirable in hot weather. If people took into consideration the wear and tear on their bodies, to say nothing of the time and shoe leather, they would in all probability realize that delivery service is the cheapest service in the end. The time will never come when such service can be dispensed with. In fact the demand for it has grown, as shown in increased facilities in some of our stores. The days of the "basket" suggest the days of women burden-bearers and we are inclined to think that that custom along with that age has passed for good. The women of 1916 have higher aims and their work is along more progressive lines.

Of course this advertisement is directly opposed to the effort many retailers are making—to cut down the cost of delivery. This advertisement invites consumers to use delivery more and more, which may be a good thing to do, and may not be. I suspect that there are chain stores in Dover, N. J., who do not deliver, and Lehman & Co's advertising is intended to contrast the easy comfort of getting your goods delivered free, with the bother of taking a basket to a chain store and carting your own goods home. This might be good business and it might not, as I said before. Sometimes the individual store is put to it to meet the competition of the chain store, and naturally the thing to do is to exploit everything the individual store offers which the chain store does not. Free delivery is one of them, of course, and it is probably a good advertising stunt to feature that as much as possible.

I have from C. M. Hertzog, of East Greenville, Pa., a circular which he used to advertise his fourth anniversary sale. Like the piece of Hertzog advertising which I reproduced and commented on some weeks ago, it is pretty crudely printed. If I were Mr. Hertzog, I should get a new printer or read the riot act to the old one. His advertising is wholly devoid of typographical attractiveness. Styles of type are combined which were never intended to go together, and the effect is exceedingly bad. A country town printer can't be expected to have all the type styles in the world, but he can be expected to have common sense. Mr. Hertzog's offerings for his anniversary week were as follows:—

This should have made this store a lively place during the anniversary week. Something doing every day. I consider this a good advertising idea. I should hinge some special effort on everything I could, provided it was logical and legitimate. Inventory taking, clean-up sale, store anniversaries, coffee week, raisin week, removal sale, all things make good pegs to special sales on.

Sell Franklin Carton Sugar by the Container

Your customers know what sugar is and what it will do, and expect to keep on buying it and eating it as long as they live. The right thing to do when a woman asks for sugar is to sell her a SUPPLY instead of SAMPLE—sell her a WHOLE CONTAINER of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR instead of one or two CARTONS.

It's easy to show a woman the convenience of having a CONTAINER of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in the house, always handy when she needs it.

Selling FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR by the CONTAINER is not only a convenience for your customers, but it saves you money, because you make one delivery instead of dozens. It gives you a wholesale outlet at a retail profit—you don't have to even open the CONTAINER to make your profit on every CARTON in it. When you sell a woman a CONTAINER of 30 two-pound CARTONS you make the profit on her purchases of sugar for some time to come; if you sell her one CARTON you leave an opening for competitors to sell her the other TWENTY-NINE. Lots of your customers buy flour by the barrel, potatoes by the bushel, canned goods by the dozen—it just as easy to sell them FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR BY THE CONTAINER. Try it.

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is packed 24, 48, 60 and 120 pounds to the CONTAINER. Ask your Jobber for full information as to grades.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can possibly sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

BABBITT'S

"Keeps its strength to the greatest length"

and that's why consumers know it's "The Lye to Buy." There are many uses for lye and its virtue all lies in the way it is made, just as its sale depends on the way it's advertised. We keep up its quality and strength. It is unequalled as a home soap maker, disinfectant and deodorizer. The new sifter top tin makes it handy for the consumer to use. Call your customers' attention to this new package and you have additional sales and profits. The Trade Marks are good for valuable and useful presents.

An Argument for Bulk Goods Instead of Package Goods

This Writer Says a Retailer Can't Build Good Will on Anything But Goods He Sells in Bulk Making His Own Packages.

The best packages which go out from the retail store should be those put up by the retailer himself. This is not often true, however, and the fact that it is not so is somewhat of a merited criticism of present methods in retail food shops.

Foods which the retailer buys and sells in bulk quantities are under his immediate supervision and control. They directly reflect the character of his business policies. They usually show him a better profit than foods factory packaged. The bulk foods which the retailer sells are the only lines in his stock which build good will. He is known to his customers by the quality of those lines which he puts out under his own personal trade-mark, as it were.

The infinite variety of package foods are nationally advertised and are in many cases sold before they reach the retailer. The purchaser of these foods contribute good will almost exclusively to the manufacturer of them. The fact that people can buy them at every store in town makes it impossible for the retailer selling them to assure himself of future sales. His profit on them is often fixed, and the fact that they are sold before they reach him frequently operates to diminish this profit until it becomes a mere handling charge, which scarcely covers his overhead.

Not so with the bulk lines. He buys them from the producer most often. The care with which he selects them and distributes them brings back a measure of good will and satisfaction, which is his exclusive property. Good bulk goods and good service belong to him alone, and create confidence in his judgment and methods.

If a woman buys good butter, good sausage or any other good bulk food from a retailer, gets it in a satisfactory package, appreciates the good quality of it and the character of the service which went with it, she remembers the retailer who sold it to her. She may get the same deal at another store and she may not. She knows, however, that she can have the order duplicated in every particular, and so she goes back to the retailer who sold it to her.

So it behooves the retailer to give careful attention to his bulk food lines to make certain that their quality is satisfactory and to supervise the retail sale of them most shrewdly. They should always be put up in neat and attractive packages when they are given or delivered to the consumer. Bear in mind that they reflect your ideas of doing business, and that they are the invisible wires which will pull business back to you. Be careful in the selection of containers for bulk foods—the best is none too good.

STERLING BEESON.

Toledo, Ohio, Nov. 9, 1916.

Washington Talks of Wheat and Flour Manipulation.

The present high prices of wheat and the consequent high price of wheat flour are not due entirely to the usual laws of supply and demand, Government officials say. On the contrary, they assert, there is every reason to believe that the wheat market has been manipulated and that brokers are reaping a golden harvest. The Administration now has three separate agencies at work investigating the cause of abnormal wheat prices, all of which have been sending in reports tending to bear out the statement that the wheat market is being manipulated. Official statistics in possession of the Department of Agriculture show that the average wheat crop for the seventeen years, from 1900 to 1916 inclusive, was 682,000,000 bushels. The Government's estimate for this year, which is conservative as usual, is 607,000,000 bushels. This shows that while the wheat crop for 1916 is lower than the average, it is not so low it could be classed as abnormal or give excuse for the present sky-high prices of wheat. Despite statements to the contrary, information has come to the Interstate Commerce Commission that grain elevators of the Middle West are stocked to the limit with wheat and that farmers are finding it difficult to market their grain. According to this information, part of the immense stock of wheat that is now in elevators is of last year's immense crop.

If You Want An Economical Food to Feature, Consider Fresh Fish

At the Present It Is the Only Cheap Substitute for Meat. Everything Has Advanced, Fruit, Vegetables and Meat, But Fish Remains Moderate.

Retail grocers and general storekeepers who are looking for an economical food to feature, should turn their attention to fresh fish. More than ever before the coming winter will impress upon the public of this country the importance of fish as a food, is the belief of authorities on household economics. The present summer, because of the superfluity of rain, many of the crops have been failures, cutting down the fruit and vegetable supply. Meat is high and threatens to be higher still. On every hand the cost of living seems to be growing greater, with the sole exception of the fish market.

Receipts of fresh fish at the Boston Fish Pier, Boston, the center of the fresh salt water fishing industry of the country, have been encouraging in size, and indications are that they will continue heavy throughout the fall.

It has been an excellent mackerel and swordfish year, and these two varieties should be found in the market at reasonable price well into the cold weather. Groundfish of all kinds remain the same in price as it was ten years ago.

The introduction of new varieties, such as greyfish, to the market is another hopeful sign. There is no meat fit for human consumption which has not been exploited since, and consequently no which is to-day low in price. are a score of varieties of fi the other hand, of which th eral public is as yet hardly zant. - Hake, pollock, of bluefish, greyfish, albacore, and other varieties eaten ext ly abroad, are just beginning a sale in this country and will fore remain low in price un demand shall cause a short the catch, something which a ent seems far in the future.

Greyfish is really dogfish. Government changed its nam time ago because the name was not attractive. To-day, few weeks after the Govern campaign was begun to make popular fish, one vessel has a gone into the business of ca dogfish for market.

For a long time to co greyfish should be cheap in th ket; first, because the sup large, and second, because fo time the demand will be in fancy.

Dry Goods—October, 191 liabilities, $545,714; Oct 1915, 71; liabilities, $1,150,03

Shoes—October, 1916, 31 bilities, $326,785; October, liabilities, $205,407.

Thus in all the above lines is an appreciable falling off October, 1915.

Important Letter to the Trade from the T. A. Snider Preserve Company

The T. A. Snider Preserve Company has issued the following letter to the wholesale grocery trade of the United States:

November 1, 1916.

TO THE WHOLESALE GROCERS OF THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA:—ONE HUNDRED PER CENT. TO BE DELIVERED ON ALL SNIDER ORDERS

Our sales have been enormously heavy the past thirty days. We still have five hundred and twelve cars to ship on our Fall orders. We have been running night and day since August 4th.

The unusual amount of late orders we have received unquestionably have been diverted to us from some of our competitors on account of many of them delivering short on their future orders.

We have considerable surplus stock for sale after we have filled all of our future orders. Prices and terms on our surplus stock will be made public within thirty days.

Until we have shipped our prompt shipping orders, we will not accept any more orders from wholesalers.

We have a tabulated list showing amount of goods sold to you; also amount of orders sold to the retail grocers through you. We respectfully request you to properly fill 100 per cent. on all our orders from retail grocers that we have turned over to you. Please see that you do not sell against your purchases, so that you will not be able to fill 100 per cent. on the retail orders we have sold through you.

We trust that you will realize the importance of filling your retail orders in the manner described in the previous paragraph. You understand it is your obligation to the retailer—not ours. Our obligation is to fill your order complete, and your obligation is to completely fill your orders that we have turned into you for the retail grocers.

Yours very truly,

THE T. A. SNIDER PRESERVE CO.

In line with the above is the following, which was sent to all of the Snider Company's salesmen about the same time:

October 31, 1916.

Gentlemen:—

We sent you day letter yesterday as follows, which we now confirm:—

"Our sales have been enormously heavy the past thirty days. We still have five hundred and twelve cars to ship on rush fall orders. Until we can catch up on prompt shipping orders we will not accept any more orders from wholesalers or retailers direct. Sell against wholesalers previous purchases only."

We are going to leave it to your business intelligence to see that all wholesale grocers deliver 100 per cent. on all the free deals on Snider's Catsup and Soup that you have sold them.

We will deliver one hundred per cent. to the wholesalers on their orders.

Some wholesalers will undoubtedly deliver short on the orders carrying free catsup and free soup unless you properly check them.

The only danger point for you to watch for is that the wholesaler does not sell against his stock so he will be unable to fill his retail orders 100 per cent. that you have turned into him.

Yours very truly,

THE T. A. SNIDER PRESERVE CO.

WITH THE EDITOR

The Pepper Fraud.

In a recent issue was published an article by a "Wholesale Grocery Salesman" charging that some unnamed spice manufacturer, with whom the salesman had to compete, was practicing a fraud by packing an ounce of pepper in a two-ounce carton. The article was the salesman's protest at being compelled to meet what he considered unfair competition. The New York "Journal of Commerce" thus comments on the case:—

> Speaking of fraudulent intent, a jobber's salesman in Philadelphia complains of the competition of a certain brand of pepper packed in a large box, but actually hardly more than half full, and writes a trade paper editor for an opinion as to whether such packing is fraudulent. And the editor plainly tells him that he thinks it is.
> Undoubtedly that editor is right. It is inconceivable that any spice packer would really use a box twice as large as he needed to hold the commodity without a reason, and it is evident that his reason was to convey an impression which was not borne out by the facts. And even if the actual weight were stated on the label it is unlikely that it would be as much a factor in forming an estimate in the buyer's mind as to the contents as the size of the box would.
> It is this fact which makes some forms of the net weight law unreasonable and objectionable to manufacturers. The law requires the statement in terms of weight, measure or numerical count of contents, but such do not always convey to the buyer's mind the true facts. For instance, the buyer may have no idea what a certain commodity in a box of a certain size should weigh in ounces, or measure, or bulk, but if he knew the box were full, he would gain a very tangible idea of what he was buying. And while no such form of marking contents is provided under the law, it is evident that the present law may be complied with and yet permit fraud.

This is the right of the matter, without a doubt. It would be idle to contend that a consumer is not deceived by a carton which is twice the size it needs to be to accommodate its contents. Of course she is deceived. It is human nature, as well as practical experience, to believe that an original box of pepper is full when offered for sale.

Moreover, this is a deceit which in many cases would never be discovered, for consumers will keep the pepper in its original package and merely shake it as needed out of the perforated top. She might think it used itself up rather quickly, but the impression made by that would not amount to much. It is a very cleverly devised fraud.

Idle Talk.

Here is a letter which enables me to say something which has been in my mind for a long time:

McComb, Miss., Nov. 3, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We appreciate "The Stroller" telling us about the "stunt" for us grocers, and would like to ask you to help us find out more about the twenty-five foodstuffs that he mentions.

Where can we get a book or bulletin telling about the nutritive values of the different foodstuffs?

Hoping that you can help us out in this, we are,

Yours truly,
GOLDEN RULE STORE.
P. E. Cullom, Manager.

To first answer Mr. Cullom's question, why doesn't he go over his stock book? He will find upon it probably more than twenty-five staple foods that have advanced little or none since the European war began, and that are still very moderate in price.

What I want to say concerns his request for information concerning the nutritive value of different foods. It is all very well for a grocer to have such knowledge as that—he cannot know too much about his business—but I should never expect to get much by advertising the nutritive value of foods. Consumers are not interested in the nutritive value of foods. Some of them think they are, but they are not in any sense that controls their buying, or even influences it very much. Palatability, sightliness and price are the three factors that consumers are interested in, and the minute a dealer begins to talk about proteids and proteins his customers begin to get bored. When you offer a food like rice, or potatoes, or really any food whatever that the grocer handles, you don't need to talk much about food values. Consumers are perfectly willing to take those foods without that.

The Foolishness of Buying Future Canned Goods Demonstrated Again.

The fact that the practice of buying canned goods futures is to be depended on only at times when buying futures wasn't necessary, is again demonstrated this year. In times of normal pack, when the market is not fluctuating much, the buyer of futures can expect to get what he bought. But in those seasons he gains nothing by buying futures—unless he has to cover himself as to some certain brand—because he can buy at the time of delivery at the same price he paid for futures.

It is in seasons of short pack, like this, when buying futures would be useful and profitab you could be sure of gettin goods. But the future buyin tract has changed so in recent that it is now no contract at for the buyer. The seller agr deliver the goods called for, —if, and the ifs are so man so all-embracing that the bu really sure of his goods only packer has them and wants liver them.

This year the buyer of canned goods has been mos rageously stung right and Some packers are taking adv of every technical condition o contract, others are deliberat ing down and impliedly d their buyers to sue them, and have made the most shamef faults in their contracts, a selling their pack at the very higher prices which the affords.

All the sportsmanship has eliminated from the future goods contract. Time was w packer would bet he could so many cases of tomatoes at tain date and at a certain pri conditions went against him his bet like a true sport and for better luck next year. T some packers paid their bets to-day the packer hedges a buyer takes all the chance.

Selling Talks With Clerks

art a Tea Week."—You good things are catching. were you I'd start a "Tea ." Some of you will say, that's the boss's work or the ger's work." I'm aware that of you men cannot put into tion tea week, however capa- ou may be, on account of the and fast chain-store system. this suggestion applies par- rly to the clerk with a free . And in writing to you I to emphasize the importance eping ahead of the boss. The that owns a store doesn't al- do the best thinking as far etail goes. He has other lesome things that keep him . But the alert planning comes to his relief and hes out of the old way and s himself a boy of action. Now then. Get at the tea. Cover six feet of your counter with tea matting. Let the fringe hang over loosely and show up on this eight or ten kinds. Also in matting cup-like shape. Get your tickets on and—talk tea. Talk about the flowery flavor of the Ceylon. The strength of the English Breakfast. The nice delicate aroma of the Oolong, and the purity of the remarkably agreeable taste of your popular 60-cent Mixed. Get a lot of signs printed for the windows, doors and store to read "Tea Week." Stick them around everywhere and be glad to sell a quarter pound to a new buyer. Make a lot of it. "It's catching."

Don't Be A Dead One.—"We never did it that way before." If you feel that way keep it to yourself. All the slow ones are saying every day, "We never did it that way before." What if you didn't? If "that way" is better than yours, forget yours. It's a great thing to be able to see the good points in the other man. The smart fellow is the fellow who says to himself—"I've a lot to learn and I'm going to pick up some good ideas every day if possible." Anyway, don't be a dead one—don't stick to the old way of doing things when it's dead open and shut that the new way is better. That very thing keeps thousands of grocery clerks on the $10 list. The more you are willing to learn, the more responsive you are to quick, clean, common sense modern methods, the better you'll get along, because your brain is alert and your whole life is open to the go-ahead spirit.

Bringing Up the Sales.—It won't do to let your sales keep "just the same." That isn't going ahead. The "new thought" people embody in their philosophy this thought—"Divine Discontent." In other words, it's good for you to be discontented when it makes for your uplift. Not one of you can progress without this wholesome, well regulated, discontent. So it's a good thing to aim to make your sales better this week than last—not a whole lot ahead, you understand—but just ahead, and it's surprising what an inspiration come from this increase of sales.

> Customers have been in to market in much larger numbers.
> Collections continue greatly in excess of last year.

> The market on domestic cotton goods is firm and advancing.

Clear Statement of Present Food Situation. Cigars Going Up for First Time in Years. A Packer's Statement of the Ham Casing Controversy. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, November 10, 1916.

The National City Bank, which constantly keeps its finger on the pulse of business, thus summarizes the food situation in this country in a statement issued during the week:—

> The situation is aggravated by the fact that there is no compensating abundance in any of the other food crops. Corn gives only a moderate yield, oats are a fair crop, potatoes are distinctly short, and the vegetables and fruits used for canning are all in short supply. Corn bids fair to sell in the Middle West at the extraordinary price of $1 per bushel, and this will be reflected in the price of meats. Already reports from the live stock markets say that few well finished beeves are being received. It requires courage for a farmer to put weight upon cattle with corn worth above 80 cents per bushel. The hog crop seems to be good, but the provision market is kept up by high priced corn and a great European demand. A well informed Chicago writer says:—
> > The amount of meats that have been shipped to Belgium since the Belgium Relief Commission has been established is enormous and forecasts a long period of big trade from Europe during and after the war is over and there is no doubt that good prices for all kinds of hog product will prevail for a long time and the stocks of very cheap meats which existed two or three years ago are now out of the question.
> Butter, eggs and meats are moving from this country through Canada to Great Britain in large quantities, and to a great extent in pursuance with contracts made last summer.

For the first time in many years the retail price of cigars is going up. Labor in the tobacco districts has gone to more highly paid positions, wooden tobacco cases have advanced, as has the cheesecloth used in growing tobacco, fertilizers are all higher and so are farm implements.

Readers of this correspondence are familiar with the long waged controversy over the right of the Western packers to charge for the casings on ham and bacon at the meat rate, and also whether hams and bacon were package goods, and had to have the net weight marked on the label. During the week one of the large packers, Swift & Co., has made the following statement giving the packers' side:—

> Various articles have been printed recently concerning the campaign for the enforcement of the net weight law and the disposition of cases in court. Will you permit us space in your paper to state as briefly as possible something of the packers' side of the question.
> Many years ago nearly everything was sold in bulk. Crackers and oatmeal came out of a barrel or sack; prunes were wrapped in burlap and kicked around the floor of the grocery, and other food products were thrown on the counter of the market as an attraction for flies.
> The wrapping of smoked meats is a practice which dates back more than a quarter of a century and is necessary to retain the flavor, protect the quality, prevent the surface from drying out and mould from penetrating the meat. Also it is a precaution taken so that hams and bacon will reach the consumer in as good condition as they leave the packing house. Further, at some seasons of the year and in many localities it is a protection of the meat against flies.
> Fresh meat is handled all the way through under refrigeration and is, as a rule, protected against flies, but this is not true of smoked meats, consequently some artificial protection against flies is necessary.
> Certain kinds of flies lay eggs in the meat, whenever they have access to it, from which develop "skippers," which make the smoked meats unsalable.
> The retail dealer or consumer suffers no loss by reason of the meat being wrapped, because the price is made on the basis of it being wrapped and a different price would be charged if meat had to be sold unwrapped.
> Much experimenting was indulged in by the packers to find a paper that would protect adequately hams and bacon, preventing them from drying out, and thus insure the purchaser a fresh, clean product. For a number of years now all high class hams and bacon have been wrapped in parchment paper of the highest grade.
> Wrapped hams and bacon lose some weight, but not so much or so rapidly as the unwrapped product. Protection from "skipper" flies, cleanliness, and a partial prevention of shrinkage are the main considerations for the payment for the wrapping that has been the cause of an adverse court decision and much criticism. It has been charged that the sale of wrappings of hams and bacon has netted the packers a million dollars a year illegal profit and a demand is made in some quarters that the net weight of the package must be stamped on it.
> If the net weight were to be marked upon hams and bacon at the time that they are wrapped it would not accomplish the desired object. The meat will shrink up to the time that it reaches the hands of the consumer and if he were to buy at the net weight marked he would be paying for shrinkage, which would equal or exceed the weight of the wrappings.
> Dr. E. S. Hodgskin, in an article in the New York "Evening Sun," September 8th, says: "We have heard a great deal lately about the awful crime and wickedness of selling hams in a protected wrapper. So many reforms when analyzed as to their ultimate beneficence show the childishness of the argument of the reformers. What is the purpose of the wrapper? Is it for the purpose of adding weight to the package and, as some reports have it, make the purchaser pay for paper and cloth, thus adding a half cent a pound to the cost of the ham? If one rea izes that ham is a perishab product then the necessity a protective wrapper is once manifest. The wrapp should be light and at t same time so strong that cannot be easily torn broken in the handlin There should be no unpr tected spot on the ham b enough for flies or other i sects to crawl on and poison

The American Grocers' Society.

Rosemont, N. J., Nov. 7, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Can you give me any information regarding the American Grocers' Society, Inc. I am informed that it is a stock company, having about 14,000 members among grocers throughout the United States. They sell all members 10 per cent. off list price on trade-mark brands, and the stock pays 8 per cent. dividends. I am inclosing you one of their pamphlets. I have thought of joining the same, but would like to know more of the company before so doing. Awaiting the same, I remain,

Yours truly,
P.

The American Grocers' Society has had several advertisements in this paper and we are familiar with its plan. It is a corporation and sells stock to retailers. As inducements, it offers staple package goods at very low prices and also the right to sell its own private brand of various package goods. As to whether it is making good, certain retailers have told us from time to time that they had saved considerable sums of money by buying through the society.

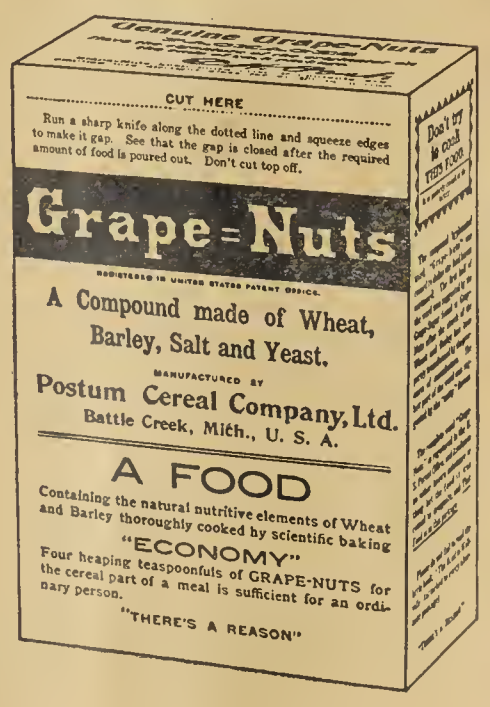
Credit-Rating Plan and Co-operative Delivery.

Fort Pierce, Fla., Nov. 2, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Mr. John Powers, of this city, who is a subscriber to your journal, informs me that you can tell me of a plan of credit rating for small towns, also of a plan for co-operative delivery service.

If you can be of service to me in this respect I can pass it along. Thanking you,



Yours truly,
R. L. GOODWIN,
Secretary St. Lucie County Board of Trade.

The fundamentals of a credit rating plan which could be worked in small towns is as follows:—

Repeat-Order Profits

—combined with the new business constantly being promoted by heavy, well-directed advertising is good reason why grocers should boost

Grape-Nuts

Once used Grape-Nuts is pretty sure to hold a regular place on the family table. The food is always the same—fresh, crisp and delicious.

Grape-Nuts advertising is always at work; the margin for grocers is good, and a little selling attention repays in steady profit.

"There's a Reason"

The local retailers would have to get together. Each should compile a list of his customers, with letters or figures to indicate the opinion of the particular store of the customer's financial responsibility, as "slow pay," "prompt pay," etc. With these lists all in, a complete local directory could be compiled giving a composite rating of each buyer in the place. These could be open to all the members and would be found very useful.

To make this plan effective, every member, the minute a customer becomes delinquent, should turn in the name to the association and have it circulated to all the members, so that each shall be warned.

As to co-operative delivery, write the retail merchants' associations of Champaign, or Urbana, both Indiana.

National Canners' Association Warns Canned Goods Packers to Advance Prices.

Says Everything That the Packer Uses Has Advanced and It Would Be a Mistake to Sell Future 1917 Canned Goods at 1916 Future Price.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
November 10, 1916.

The National Canners' Association, whose headquarters are located here, has issued the following to canners all over the country, whether members of the association or not, a suggestion that they should not offer future 1917 canned goods at the prices which they made on future 1916 canned goods, when they were offered about a year ago. The association's statement, showing the advances in the canners' expenses, is as follows:—

Washington, D. C.,
November 4, 1916.

Any canner, heedless of the signs of the times, now selling the 1917 output of canned foods at prices specified in 1916 future contracts, not only commits an open assault on business fair play, but brings down upon his head swift and sure disaster—the unavoidable result of rash and reckless bargains.

Selling for future delivery is fair and lawful competition, provided the price is based on carefully ascertained cost values. The canner knowing not his cost, and by reason of which cannot perform his contracts, very nearly approaches the unlawful. He has no reason to resent the well-deserved reproach of indignant customer or the scorn of fair and loyal competitor.

The Federal Trade Commission, an important branch of Government service, is now conducting a campaign of education with manufacturers relating to cost accounting systems.

The National Canners' Association, following this distinguished lead, is engaged in a similar work, and indicates to every canner the imprudence of marketing his products without first obtaining complete and accurate knowledge of production costs.

Times have changed. The investigator now holds the center of the stage. The guesser's act is done.

Here are undeniable facts. They cannot be ignored. Analyse them and prove their literal truth:—

a.—Seeds have advanced nearly 75 per cent.

b.—No. 2 cans are increased 8 cents a dozen.

c.—Labels have now advanced fully 50 per cent.

d.—Boxes increase cost nearly 1 cent a dozen.

e.—Wages continually advance without the formality of strikes.

These are reliable, up-to-date advances for a part of the material applying to the direct cost of canned foods. Prices to be made will be demanded without apology or regret, and you will have to pay—or quit.

With such facts staring every canner in the face, it is an inexcusable blunder to sell a case of food without first knowing the real, actual cost price of it.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

The Wellsboro Association is in a thriving condition. The public rest room established in the town has been visited by over 10,000 out-of-town customers and it is proving a real asset. Retail business shows about a 20 per cent. increase. A new glass factory is about completed and manufacturing will be commenced next week. The company operating this plant has about decided to double its capacity and work on the new plant will be started in February. Eventually 1,200 men wil be employed. All this has been brought about by an unusually active Business Men's Association.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market remains unchanged for the week. The entire list of desirable grades is steady to firm; demand fair. Anybody owning tea to-day has safe property.

Coffee.

The coffee market, meaning all grades of Rio and Santos, is weaker, probably by about ⅛ cent. The cause is the very large stocks of available coffee. The United States is handling this now instead of Europe, and the general tone is easier and may ease off even more. Buyers have not a great deal of confidence in the market, and are buying only what they need. Mild coffees are unchanged on the previously reported low basis. The demand is light. Java and Mocha unchanged and dull.

Sugar.

The sugar market shows no material change for the week. Raws are ruling around 6.55, and granulated from 7.50 to 7.60 cents. Raw sugar is coming from some new places, owing to the heavy demand, and this has eased off the situation to some extent, though it has not caused any decline as yet. The consumptive demand for sugar is poor. No relief appears in the immediate future.

Syrup and Molasses.

The glucose situation has eased off considerably, due to the loosening of the squeeze in old crop corn. Glucose can now be bought for early shipment at 10 points off. Compound syrup is unchanged, but the big manufacturers are back in the market again and the whole situation is easier. Sugar syrup and molasses are unchanged and quiet.

Fish.

The fish market is unchanged. Shore mackerel, Irish mackerel and 1915 Norway mackerel are all precisely where they were a week ago. The supply is not large, prices are high and the demand good. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and quiet; prices continue high. Domestic sardines are tending higher by reason of scarcity; imported sardines show no change for the week. Salmon quite firm, prices still tending upward; demand active.

Canned Goods.

There has been no material change in the tomato market during the past week, but there has been no decline in price. Corn and peas are both still very firm but the demand is not as heavy as it was a short time ago, although the supplies of all three of the principal items in first hands are extremely limited. Spinach, string beans and other small items packed in Baltimore are very scarce and prices are still at the top. There is a good demand for salmon and sardines but with no material advance in price. California canned fruits are almost entirely exhausted in packers' hands. There is probably less stock in California than there has been for ten or fifteen years.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes, peaches and apricots are unchanged on spot. The association has advanced prices in California on peaches but no sales have been made at the advance.

Butter.

The butter market is very firm at unchanged prices. Receipts are lighter than they have been for the last two or three weeks. Consumptive demand is slightly above normal for this time of the year. Export business still continues heavy, which tends to cause the present high prices. If there will be any change in the market it will be toward higher quotations.

Eggs.

The egg market is very firm at unchanged quotations. Receipts are normal for this time of the year and the home consumption is good. Some refrigerator eggs are very firm and there has been no change in quotations, although higher prices are looked for before the end of the month. Warehouse holdings are about normal for this time of the year.

Cheese.

The cheese market is very firm, showing an advance from ½ to ¾ cents per pound. Advices from country markets in the East are reported from ¼ to ½ cent higher, and Wisconsin markets advanced 2½ to 3 cents last week, causing a great deal of uncertainty in the cheese market. Markets are a little unsettled as yet, but higher prices are looked for. Export demand is heavy and home consumption good.

Beans and Peas.

Beans are in slightly better supply and in consequence the price has declined from 20 to 50 cents a bushel on pea beans. Marrows are still held at the same price as last week. Lima beans are steadily advancing with every indication of a still higher market, as they are the cheapest bean for sale to-day. Green and Scotch peas have gone to unprecedented high prices, the last quotation being over $5 per bushel, with practically none offered. Barley is another item that has taken a wonderful advance, the present price being just exactly double the opening price of a few months ago.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats are firm and unchanged in price, there being a good consumptive demand and fair receipts. Pure lard is very firm at the recent advance and we do not look for any lower prices for two or three weeks to come, the consumption being good and export heavy. Compound lard is very firm with unchanged prices. The market on cottonseed oil having declined does not, however, affect the market on compound. Dried beef is firm with unchanged prices. Consumption is heavy and receipts normal for this time of year. Canned meats are unchanged. They are holding very firm with a good consumptive and some export. Higher prices are looked for before the end of the year. Barreled pork is steady with a fair consumptive demand.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPO

Wheat and Flour.

In a very few weeks there develop a shortage in cars which is likely to cause very great distress, and we cannot too strongly urge upon our friends the importance of carrying in their warehouses ample stocks of flour and such other commodities on which they may be dependent.

We are passing through a most unusual period in that the stocks of flour in bakers' and jobbers' hands are below normal, and because of the continuously advancing prices the great majority have been pursuing a hand-to-mouth policy of buying. This, coupled with the present shortage, will certainly lead to a very distressing situation a little later on. It is quite evident that there will be a great demand for flour in the East regardless of any price movement from now on. It is certainly no far-seeing business man should approach this situation without making ample provision to meet it in advance. Our advice to both millers and jobbers is to carry large stocks during the next four months and not place their business in jeopardy by allowing their stocks to dwindle with the uncertainty of replenishing them.

We are sounding this friendly note of warning and sincerely hope that those of our friends who have been indifferent to the grave situation that confronts them will profit by this advice. A car of flour in the bakery may be worth a dozen at the mill.

We now come to discuss the wheat situation, and are sorry to say that we can see no prospect of lower prices, except that there may be an occasional reaction from the upward trend of prices.

Routine statistics are no longer of interest and while our prices in this country are very high, we are more fortunate than our brothers across the seas. They are literally confronted with the grave problem of securing sufficient supplies to last until the next harvest. A cable of our English correspondent writes that the European requirements are much greater than Broomhall's estimates, and that the minimum requirements of importing nations will be from 600,000,000 to 640,000,000 bushels, and that it has been the policy of the statisticians to minimize their requirements in order to hold prices in check.

Ever since harvest the importing nations have been disheartened in seeing one source of supply after another have a crop failure. What was expected of Argentina, and now that the crop is almost a complete failure, it has further complicated an already distressing situation.

The British Government has recently set its hands to the task of furnishing transportation faciliıe market record for the week at of increasing activity. Buy-are taking hold and enlarging assortment. Even at the re-advance on all styles, rice is rently conceded to be on a safe for operation, and prices likely e sustained at least up to Janıst, if not for the remainder he present crop. In fact, all grades of all varieties show an advancing tendency, due to the unprecedented demand caused by high prices of other foodstuffs, and when placed in comparison with present prices of beans and potatoes, one can appreciate the cause of the large demand for this cereal and that consumption of rice will be greatly increased this year.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast indicate continued quiet conditions, especially on lower grades, due to the fact that there have been very few offerings and that the consumption of rice throughout this section (normally a heavy consumer of rice) has not correspondingly increased with other sections.

At New Orleans the market for clean shows an advancing tendency on all grades on account of the heavy demand.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, the rough rice market shows further strength, higher prices having been paid, while offerings can be said to be limited and receipts arriving represent mill purchases. Some mills are booked for their capacity for November shipment and will only accept business for December and January deliveries.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Holland herrings during the last week have been selling rather freely, but the market has a weak tendency owing to the expectancy of large shipments to come. Scotch herrings are in fair demand and prices are steady. Norwegian herrings are in very good demand and prices are higher, and are likely to go still higher in the near future.

There is a good jobbing and consuming demand for all kinds of imported sardines. The trade and the consumer have gradually gotten accustomed to pay the price, or go without the goods. We are in the same position. At first we thought that we ought to stay out of the market and wait until prices came down to a more reasonable level, and we lost a lot of business, but when we came to the conclusion that it is not likely that we will see lower prices for imported sardines in the near future, and when we began to buy at full values and imported the goods, we found that the consuming trade and the jobbers had gotten over their ideas that they had to get the sardines at the same price they were able to get them in former times. Now they are selling freely.

Owing to the advanced prices for tinplate, solder, etc., and the scarcity of labor, there is no chance, in our opinion, for lower prices on imported sardines in the near future. The price for cottonseed oil and similar substitute oils is steadily climbing higher, and the present cottonseed oil prices make the olive oil prices look mighty cheap. We find that a lot of our trade that has been using blended oils has now come to the conclusion that it would pay them better to handle strictly pure olive oil, which is only so very little more expensive than the blended or the plain cottonseed oil. Consequently the demand for pure olive oil has shown a very decided increase of late. So much so that shipments from abroad are hardly sufficient to cover the steadily and daily increasing demand. On the other hand, the finest grades of olive oil like those which we import are hard to get. They are very scarce, and we have to pay big prices to get the supply we need. New oil, of course, will be in the market very soon, but we

SILENT DAYTON
No. 10 MEAT SLICER

More Dayton Slicers are being sold than all other makes. There's a mighty good reason behind the marvelous growth of this new industry, and the reason is that there is nothing like it on the market at any price. It is the acme of perfection.

The HOWE Is Not a Refrigerator That Eats Its Head Off

There are some beautiful refrigerators on the market that, while we call them refrigerators, are really only imitations. They are beautiful exteriors but that is all. The heart—the refrigerating principle—is lacking. They are simply good-looking boxes that eat their heads off.

The Howe Refrigerator, we know, uses less ice than any other refrigerator made, owing to its double air lock door. The Howe double air lock door will pay you a dividend, in ice-saving, every day you use it. Write to us about it.

could not think of importing this new oil until it has matured for several months, because the new oil is always rather strong in taste, and would not do at all for our fine brands. Olive oil is one of the few articles that has shown practically no advance since the beginning of the war, and we are very much afraid that all of a sudden we will see a strong advance in the price of fine edible olive oil.
